Widow of Long Urged to Finish Term in Senate

Responsibility at Home Too Great, She Says, Refusing Post.

Senator Planned To Be President

Would Have Put Off His Candidacy Till 1940, Aid Reveals.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Baton Rouge, La., Sept. 13.—Attempts are being made to persuade Mrs. Huey P. Long to accept appointment as United States Senator to fill her husband's unexpired term, it was learned tonight.

One person close to the family said she repeatedly had refused to accept the position on the grounds that "I have my children and they are my whole concern; I have no time for anything like senatorial duties."

It was indicated, however, that the appointment might be the way out if the late Senator's lieutenants reach a deadlock on who should take charge of the Long organization.

"She may be persuaded to accept the position," a high State official said.

If the plan works out, Mrs. Long presumably would hold the post only until January, 1937, when her late husband's term expires.

Inside Story Told.

Earlier, the man who steered Long into the Senate broke a four-year silence and revealed the inside story by which the Kingfish was building himself up in the hope of marching into the White House in 1940 as President of the United States.

He is Speaker Allen K. Ellender, of the Louisiana House of Representatives—a potato grower and a shrewd politician, who managed Long's campaign for the United States Senate and defended him when impeachment charges were brought against the Kingfish as Governor.

Long had no intention of starting a third political party next year, Ellender said in an interview. Instead, he was going into the agrarian West and South in an attempt to line up enough delegates to go to the Democratic national convention next summer and try to prevent the renomination of President Roosevelt.

"His plans were definite," Ellender said. "He was willing to break free from the Democratic Party and support a Progressive Republican

Howe's Friend Is Shot Dead

Fuller, Ex-Canal Chief in N.Y., Introduced Aid to Roosevelt.

By the Associated Press.

Albany, N. Y., Sept. 13.—Royal K. Fuller, former State commissioner of canals, was found shot to death in his office in a downtown building late today.

Three employes in the insurance business which Fuller ran found his body on the floor after hearing a shot. A pistol lay nearby.

The body was removed to an undertaking room and Coroner Ernest Hein was called.

Fuller, who was about 60 years old, was commissioner of canals in 1923 and 1924 and was succeeded by Maj. Thomas F. Farrell, now head of the division of engineering. He became secretary to Col. Frederick Stuart Greene, when Greene was named State highway commissioner by former Governor Alfred E. Smith in 1923.

Prior to that time he had been legislative correspondent for the New York Herald. He originally was a Watertown newspaperman.

His employes heard the fatal shot fired soon after most other offices in the building had been closed at the end of the day. They rushed into his private office on the fifteenth floor, but found the body in an adjacent room.

Fuller was said by former newspaper associates to have introduced Louis McHenry Howe to Franklin D. Roosevelt. Howe later became the President's chief adviser. He was Fuller's assistant when he met Mr. Roosevelt.

At one time Fuller was secretary to John N. Carlisle, utilities magnate.

He and Mrs. Fuller have been socially prominent in Albany. Their home in fashionable Loudonville is one of the show places of the capitol district.

Plans Death on 13th.

Northampton, Mass., Sept. 13.—Wincenty Mazata, 55, who, police said, yesterday told unbelieving friends Friday the 13th would be his last day alive, hanged himself in his back yard with 13 feet of rope. Medical Examiner Dr. Edward Brown gave a verdict of suicide.

Hopkins Wins Biggest Slice Of Work Fund

Ickes' Housing, Tugwell's Rural Aid Plans Cut by Roosevelt.

By Felix Bruner.

The $4,000,000,000 works relief program took a fresh start yesterday after being revamped by President Roosevelt.

While reports from Hyde Park, after a long conference between the President and key men in the program, failed to clear up some of the important details, it was obvious that the President expects to stress the job of getting people to work rather than the value of the work to be done.

With the deadline for allotments still set for next Tuesday, Harry L. Hopkins, Works Progress administrator, is expected to be given the bulk of the $1,250,000,000 still unallocated to spend in a hurry-up job of taking people off relief. At the same time, it was apparent that the Public Works Administration faces a greatly curtailed program.

The President, apparently, is determined to get the Government out of the business of building apartments for rent and to put this project on a self-liquidating basis. Only a comparatively small part of the PWA housing program and none of the Rural Resettlement housing program are to be financed entirely by Federal funds.

Chicago Flier Forming Air Corps for Selassie

Marseille, Sept. 13 (U.P.).—Hal du Berrier, Chicago stunt flier, was en route to Djibouti today to organize a foreign legion of aviators to fight for Ethiopia.

Interviewed in his third-class cabin on the steamer Angers, Du Berrier said he was sailing alone "but some of my buddies already are waiting for me at both Djibouti and Addis Ababa and I have written promises from scores of others that they will join me."

The aviator had several thousand French gas masks which he hoped to sell to Emperor Haile Selassie.

Girl Vanishes In Mystery; Man Hunted

13-Year-Old Disappears on Way to Virginia High School.

A mystery involving the disappearance of a 13-year-old girl and a 23-year-old construction engineer confronted Arlington County (Va.) police last night.

Betty Bowman, daughter of Mrs. Kathleen Bowman, of East Falls Church, left home Thursday morning riding her bicycle. She was bound for the Jefferson High School in Falls Church, but she never got there.

Richard H. Welles, son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl H. Welles, 1909 Highland street, Clarendon, Va., left home about the same time, saying he was going to Baltimore to inquire about a trip to South America. He did not return.

The two knew each other, police were told, and Betty had been writing affectionate letters to Welles.

Catalogue Yields Note.

Just before Welles left home, police learned, he gave his mother a catalogue and instructed her to give it to Betty's mother if she came to the house. This Mrs. Welles did when Mrs. Bowman asked her if she had seen Betty.

In the catalogue, Mrs. Bowman found a note. According to the police, it said in substance:

"Don't follow us. I will not be taken alive. Will not harm her."

Welles has been employed as an engineer by the Le Porte Construction Co., which is building sewers in Arlington County. According to his mother, he always has had a desire to travel. Several years ago, when this wanderlust seized him, he made a tour of Europe, she said, and recently he had obtained a passport in preparation for a trip to South America.

Took Two Suitcases.

When he left the house Thursday he took along two suitcases packed with clothes, his mother said.

He drove away in his automobile. This was found abandoned yesterday morning at Carney Station, along the tracks of the Old Dominion Railway near Falls Church.

The Bowman girl was wearing a red bandanna hat, a blue sweater, a green dress and black slippers. Police said she looked more than 13.

The search for the girl was in charge of Policeman Harold Mason, of the Arlington County force, and Mrs. Mae E. Jacobs, of the Arlington County Public Welfare Board.

Nazis Still Hold Two U. S. Seamen

By the Associated Press.

Hamburg, Germany, Sept. 13. — Recent anti-Nazi episodes in New York, American officials indicated tonight, may complicate matters for two American seamen held in Germany. Nevertheless, they expressed hope for the release of William Gill, 21-year-old seaman from Neponset, Mass., who was arrested this week for making a derogatory remark about Reichsfuehrer Hitler and for whistling the "Internationale."

No charge has yet been placed against Gill, but conviction of showing disrespect for Der Fuehrer might conceivably carry a term of several months' imprisonment.

Another American sailor, Lawrence B. Simpson, is spending his eleventh week in a "summer camp" near Hamburg while German authorities investigate alleged activities of a Communist propaganda organization. At the time of his arrest, it was charged he possessed Communist literature. Simpson's trial date has not been fixed. The American consul visited him recently and reported he was well treated.

Hughes Hits 353 Miles an Hour, Breaks Record, Misses Death

By the Associated Press.

Santa Ana, Calif., Sept. 13.—The world's speed record for land planes was pushed nearer 6 miles a minute today by Howard Hughes, movie producer, who narrowly escaped death in a forced landing at the finish.

Taking the air only ten days after the racing car of Sir Malcolm Campbell rocketed the speed record on land to 301.337 miles an hour, Hughes roared six times over a fixed course, being clocked unofficially at 353 miles an hour, 337, 350, 340, 350 and 353 m. p. h., respectively.

Officials of the National Aeronautics Association made a slow, careful check of the official time. Joe Nikrent, N. A. A. timer, said, however, there was no doubt about the flier having broken the former mark of 314.319 established December 24, 1934, by Raymond Delmotte, of France.

The calibrated time will be sent to the Federation Aeronautique Internationale in France for recognition. N. A. A. officials expected to complete the computation here at about 6 p. m. Pacific standard time (9 p. m. Eastern standard time).

As the grim-visaged Hughes put his 14-cylinder 1,000-horsepower low-winged monoplane over the measured 3-kilometer course for the last flight, it suddenly poured a long streak of black smoke. Its motor sputtered, and the ship reeled off the course.

In a few second the $120,000 plane had disappeared from sight and an anxious crowd of watchers thought it had crashed and carried Hughes to his death.

Paul Mantz, technical adviser for Amelia Earhart, noted woman flier, flew down the course to locate the plane. As he passed over it he saw Hughes step out, uninjured, and wave to him.

Hughes said he tried to cut in his

Evelyn Hoey Death Is Branded Suicide

Henry Huddlston Rogers 3d (left rear), and William James Kelley (foreground), his friend, leave the Chester County Prison at West Chester, Pa., after posting bond to appear at the inquest into the death of Evelyn Hoey.

Every Evidence Points to Theory Torch Singer Killed Self, Says Doctor; Young Rogers and Companion Released for Inquest.

By the Associated Press.

West Chester, Pa., Sept. 13.—The death of blonde Evelyn Hoey, Broadway torch singer, virtually was branded "suicide" late today as young Henry H. Rogers 3d, in whose country home she died, was released on bond.

Dr. H. B. F. Davis, who performed an autopsy on the actress, said "every evidence pointed toward suicide," but the official report was not made public immediately.

Substantiating Davis' opinion, District Attorney William Parke tonight said "nothing has been discovered that would point to homicide," adding that unless new evidence is produced to the contrary he believes there will be no grounds for holding Rogers after an inquest next week.

No Motive Uncovered.

"We don't suspect him of murder," the district attorney said. "My private opinion is that she shot herself, but of course we have to try to get all the facts. We discovered certain facts and we're investigating to see if there are any more. The investigation is still going on."

Asked if any motive had been found for a possible murder theory, Parke replied:

"None at all. None at all. No real motive."

Finger-printed, and still clad in the rough farm clothes he wore when the body of the yellow-haired star of the musical hit, "Fifty Million Frenchmen," was discovered, Rogers and William J. Kelly, free-lance movie cameraman, were permitted to leave jail under $2,500 bond to insure their appearance at the inquest. Kelly and Miss Hoey were guests at the Rogers' farm home near Downington Wednesday night when the acress died.

They Face No Charge.

The district attorney pointed out that the men faced no charge when they were released on bond.

Mrs. Benjamin Rogers, mother of the youth and first wife of the late Standard Oil multimillionaire, Col. Henry H. Rogers 2d, visited her son in jail this morning. She was not present, however, when he drove away later to an unannounced destiantion.

An inquest tentatively was set for Wednesday. The body of the glamorous little actress, a gaping bullet wound over the right eye, was held in a local mortuary.

She was found dead, with a .45-caliber pistol nearby on the floor, and a bloodstained .38-caliber revolver on an adjacent bed, at the end of a quarrelsome evening at the Rogers country home Wednesday night.

In announcing the inquest might be postponed until next Friday, District Attorney Parke said both Rogers and Kelly were free to go where they please, provided they

Hewitt Guilty In Abduction Of Aged Sexton

Sentences Due Monday for 'Cemetery Pete' King's Kidnaper and Aid.

George O. Hewitt was convicted by a Federal court jury in Baltimore yesterday of complicity in the kidnaping of Benjamin H. King, known as "Cemetery Pete," 30, Arlington National Cemetery worker, last July.

Hewitt was prosecuted under the "Lindbergh law," which permits prison sentences up to life if the victim is not injured. United States District Judge W. Calvin Chestnut said he would sentence Hewitt and Warner W. Wood, who pleaded guilty to a kidnaping charge before Hewitt's trial began, next Monday.

The jury required but nine minutes to reach its verdict. Previously it had heard Wood testify that Hewitt had offered him $200 in the Baltimore City Jail Thursday night if Wood would shoulder the entire blame. Wood testified that he refused and that Hewitt threatened to "get" him unless he changed his mind in court yesterday.

Earlier this week, Hewitt was found guilty in seven minutes of having aided in the impersonation of a Federal officer in defrauding King of a portion of his life savings. Yesterday Judge Chestnut fined Hewitt $1,000 and sentenced him to three years in prison on that charge.

King lived at Hewitt's home near Arlington. King and Wood were charged with faking a holdup of the 65-year-old cemetery worker, with taking him for an automobile ride and later inducing him to draw $3,000 from a bank in Upper Marlboro, Md., as "ransom" money.

For 24 years King has been employed as a laborer in Arlington Cemetery. His salary was small, but "Cemetery Pete" was a judicious spender and his fortune has been estimated at from $30,000 to $40,000.

Judge Chestnut discussed the prison term to be given Hewitt with defense and prosecuting attorneys. Bernard J. Flynn, United States district attorney, suggested 20 years.

Hewitt's past record, Judge Chestnut was told, includes a life sentence for murder in Virginia and a sentence to the Maryland State Penitentiary for obtaining money under false pretenses by posing as a Baltimore City policeman. Hewitt is out on parole on the Virginia sentence.

Little Downs Goodman 4,3; Faces Emery

Californian Nips Par by 6 to Reach Finals; Jones Amazed.

Amateur Title Match Is Scheduled Today at Cleveland.

By Dave Herman,
A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, Sept. 13.—William Lawson Little, jr., met the supreme test today with a display of golf that caused Bobby Jones, the one-time monarch of the links, now in the role of spectator, to remark:

"The greatest golf I've ever seen."

And Bobby Jones was mighty right, for King Little played 33 holes in 6 under par to defeat Johnny Goodman, 1933 Open ruler, 4 and 3, and enter the final of the thirty-ninth National Amateur Championship.

Tomorrow Little will face Walter Emery, the 25-year-old Oklahoma City sensation, who brushed aside Pudgy Joe Lynch, of Boston, former Georgetown University captain, 4 and 3, in the other semifinal match.

Little and Emery, who never clashed before, will battle over the scheduled 36-hole route, but nearly all of the 5,000 who watched the successful finalists mow down their opponents today over this pine-studded, rolling 6,642-yard course doubt whether the match will go that far. Which is another way of saying that Walter Emery, 1933 nation intercollegiate champion, will face his doom somewhere along the early part of the back nine tomorrow afternoon.

New Match Record.

By disposing of Goodman, his best friend, present roommate at Cleveland and team mate in Walker Cup competition, Little ran his string of victories in two British and two American championships to 30. Of this number, 25 were 18-hole matches—a new record for the golf books.

Little has played like a champion all week, refusing to crack as where others do. In seven matches he has been 15 under par, golf the great Jones never shot when he was the king in his day.

If anyone is to stop the triumphant sweep of Little, Emery appears to be the man. He is a powerful driver, this Emery, and has been putting brilliantly. After his sensational pace for four straight days, when he won six matches with a 10-under-par exhibition, the tall Oklahoman, cooled off considerably today against Lynch and was guilty of being four over par for the 33 holes the match lasted. Despite this, Emery is still six under par, which is some golf.

Lawson Little, on the verge of winning his fourth straight major amateur championship, proved today that no man in the world can defeat him when he is on his game. Goodman challenged him with some brilliant golf, golf that ordinarily could have stopped anyone except Little.

The Nebraskan was one down at the end of nine holes and two down at intermission. Little fired a 71, one under par, to Goodman's 73, to take a two-up lead, after the poker-faced Omaha bomber had missed

Panama City, Sept. 13.—Robert Marstrand, pilot of an airliner owned by the Malek Airlines, and eight passengers were killed today when the plane crashed in the mountains near Bejuco, 56 miles from Panama City.

The passengers included two school girls, an American named A. Dahl, and Juan Pino, Mayor of David, and brother of Manuel Pino, chief of the national police.

Laval Supports Stand of Britain Against Il Duce

Tells League France Is Ready to Fight to Keep Peace.

Rome, Angered, Due to Press On

The Italo-Ethiopian Crisis.

Premier Laval of France in his address at Geneva said his nation would align itself with Britain in support of the League of Nations should Italy refuse offers of a virtual protectorate over Ethiopia. France was believed prepared to co-operate in economic or military sanctions.

In Rome an official spokesman barred any settlement agreeable to Ethiopia because Italy "doesn't trust Ethiopia."

In Ethiopia it was reported Italy may attack suddenly from the north and the south and that the war may end quickly after Il Duce's forces have seized a large slice of border land.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Geneva, Sept. 13.—Fifteen words spoken quietly but firmly by Premier Pierre Laval of France tonight stood as warning to Italy that France is ready to fight beside Britain and other European nations against any violator of the League of Nations Covenant.

"Our obligations are stated in the Covenant and France will not try to avoid them," the statesman announced simply in his anxiously awaited address to the League Assembly.

They were plain, straightforward words, but they contained a wealth of meaning. To Britain they meant that she had the collaboration of a great sister power to resist Italian militarism. To Premiere Benito Mussolini they meant that if he hurls his Blackshirt legions upon Ethiopia he may have to face united, international economic pressure—and possibly even international military force.

First Reaction From Rome.

The Covenant, which Britain, Sweden, The Netherlands, Belgium, reportedly Soviet Russia—and now France—have pledged to defend, declares that any nation which makes war in violation of the Covenant, makes war against all League members.

First reaction from Rome tonight was that Mussolini is expected to pursue his imperialistic course in Africa in defiance of threatened economic or military penalties.

"He has gone too far to turn back," was the reaction of the man in the street in Rome.

Nevertheless, even so impetuous a leader as Il Duce must have been impressed deeply by France's decisive step. Mussolini had banked heavily on France's fear of Germany and her desire for maintenance of the Stresa front—France, Britain and Italy—against the rearmed Nazis. Italians believed France would remain aloof and prevent Britain from forcing collective action by the League to halt or punish Italy.

Feared for League.

In the final analysis, Laval seems to have consulted his alternatives. By making a polite but meaningless speech for peace he could retain Italy's newly-won friendship and maintain the Stresa front against Germany but British Foreign Secretary Sir Samuel Hoare had threatened on Wednesday to withdraw Britain to isolation from the continent if the League temporized in this crisis. Furthermore it was probable that if Mussolini got away with his challenge to the League, the Geneva organization on which France's entire post-war foreign policy was founded, would crumble into insignificance.

In the momentous hours between Britain's declaration to the Assembly Wednesday and Laval's appearance today, the sober little lawyer and politician thrust into historical importance made his decision.

He decided France needed a

Missing Man's Battered Body Found in Ditch

Son of Navy Department Employe Clubbed to Death, Is Belief.

The battered body of Harry Hudson, 27-year-old unemployed son of a draftsman in the Navy Department, was found crumpled in a ravine in a small, wooded section at the end of Sibley avenue, Hyattsville, late yesterday.

Pug Taylor, a Negro, of Bladensburg, discovered the body and called Prince Georges County police. Hudson evidently had been dead about two days. His home is No. 7 Sibley avenue, a short distance from where he was found dead.

A physician, hastily summoned, examined Hudson's body. He said the skull had been crushed, and apparently the youth had died of concussion of the brain.

As Prince Georges County police hastened in their investigation, neighbors reported having found a club near the spot where the body was found.

Apparently the youth had been beaten. His lips were swollen and several teeth had been knocked out.

The victim was the son of Mr. and Mrs. George E. Hudson, with whom he lived. He was seen last by George Wiseman, a friend, with whom he exchanged greetings.

Judge Herbert Moffett will conduct an inquest into Hudson's death Tuesday.

Girl in Leap Escapes Three Death Hazards

New York, Sept. 13 (A.P.).—Grace Vollmer, 19, failed to find death in a triple-hazard leap today.

She jumped from a Bronx viaduct and barely missed striking high-tension wires, which might have shocked her to death.

She landed on the tracks 35 feet below but was not killed.

The motorman of an approaching train stopped just before the forward trucks were about to pass over her.

Boy Is Killed by Beer Truck; 76th District Traffic Death

Darting from the curb directly into the path of a heavy beer truck, Norman F. Dickens, 22-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Dickens, of 7424 Georgia avenue, was killed late yesterday.

His death was the seventy-sixth traffic fatality in the District so far this year.

The child had been taken by his parents on a visit to some family friends who live across from the Park View Playground, near Warder and Otis streets, where the accident occurred.

Witnesses said Norman left his playmates on the playground and ran between two parked automobiles to his death. He was rushed to Garfield Hospital, where physicians said a compound fracture of his skull had brought instant death.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Rakestraw, both 43, of 3900 Connecticut avenue, were injured late yesterday when they were struck by a Naval Hospital ambulance as they attempted to cross the street at Twenty-second and M streets northwest.

The car was driven by Alfred LeRoy Utter, a marine stationed at Quantico, Va., who is being held on a charge of reckless driving.

At Emergency Hospital, where they were rushed after the accident, physicians said Rakestraw suffered possible concussion of the brain and a lacerated scalp. His wife, Ann, was cut and bruised on her head.

Washington's traffic safety crusade was spurred to new heights yesterday with additional enforcement orders from Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent.

In an order to precinct commanders, Maj. Brown declared:

"From September 1, 1935, to date, there have been five traffic deaths (six with fatal injuries to a child yesterday) in the District of Columbia; one of these deaths was the for President next year, provided it was the right Republican. He told me he would back Senator William E. Borah to the limit. He liked Senator George Norris, too, but he had some doubts in his mind as to whether Norris could win."

Ellender twirled a straw hat in his hands as he talked in a richly-furnished anteroom of the Louisiana State Capitol. He was asked why Long had decided against breaking away from both parties next year and trying to ride to power while millions still were dissatisfied with economic conditions.

Technicality Considered.

"He would have liked to have done it," Ellender said. "We talked about it lots of times, but there was a technical obstacle in our way. For instance, here in Louisiana his name, as head of a third party, would have had to be written in on ballots by the voters in the primary election. Election laws are different in most of the States, but we found out that we would have been up against something of that kind almost everywhere. You can't win elections by asking people to take a pencil to the polls and write in names.

"We finally convinced Huey of that. So he decided to try to block Roosevelt next year, and then take his shot at the White House in 1940."

Long was in disagreement with almost all the Roosevelt economic policies, and he was willing to gamble that dissatisfaction still would be spread through the land in 1940, no matter who is elected next year, according to Ellender.

"Huey was getting ready to take a trip through the country when he was shot," Ellender said. "Everybody thought it was going to be merely a political stumping tour. Actually what we were going to do was to make a close study of the election laws in each State."

Looked Toward 1940.

"It would have had to have been done quietly, because he wanted to keep the two old parties off guard as long as possible.

"Then we planned to start setting up State organizations for 1940, so that we could have had a ticket in the field that conformed to local election laws."

Long had planned to make his appeal increasingly to the South and West, and the filibusters he conducted on the last day of Congress was a direct bid for the farm vote. It involved making Federal loans to cotton and wheat farmers.

"Huey was my best friend," Ellender said, "but one trouble with him was that he was impatient to jump into the middle of the fight. It took a long time to convince him that if he started a third party ticket next year, he would run the chance of being licked and not be able to come back in 1940."

"Did he honestly believe that he could be elected President?" Ellender was asked.

"He didn't doubt it. That's the big reason he stayed in the Senate instead of coming down here and running for Governor again. He would rather have been Governor than Senator, but he knew that in Washington he was a national figure. And that if he was going to keep on going up he would have to stay in the limelight there."

Ellender told about the conference at which it was decided to postpone Long's bid for the Presidency until 1940.

"Huey said: All right, boys, I'll go out and get some delegates to the Democratic convention next year.'

"We were all set for 1940 and Huey turned around to me and said: 'Allen, you old potato raiser, I think you would make a swell Secretary of Agriculture.'"

Between You and Me

Definition of An Isolationist; Hull's Dignified Plea; A One-Time A. E. F.

By Raymond Clapper

ANY intelligent isolationist ought to be able to give warm approval to Secretary of Sate Hull's dignified and balanced course in face of Mussolini's threatening preparations for war.

An isolationist is often supposed to be some one from Kansas or Iowa—at any rate he must be a provincial Middle Westerner—who doesn't give a damn what happens outside of our 3-mile limit.

If here are any isolationists of that kind in the United States they are insignificant in number and influence.

The real isolationists who make up the rapidly growing body of American sentiment are not such people. They are very much concerned about what happens across the Atlantic.

They know that war in Ethiopia would be difficult to localize now. They know that the danger of its spreading into Europe would be great. And they know that once this happened, the difficulties of Tthe United States would become grave and that it would require masterly statesmanship to keep us clear of entanglements. They know that Europe would try again to draw us in as it did in the World War. They know that Americans with munitions, cotton, wheat, oil atnd copper to sell would create tremendous economic pressures and that there would be a swarm of busybodies, official and unofficial, determined that the United States should leap in again to make the world safe for democracy, for the Lion of Judah, for the British Empire, or something.

No, isolationists are not unconcerned about what happens in the rest of the world. Their view, as it seems to crystallize in the thought of one of them, it about like this:

They hope greatly that the League of Nations will succeed in dissuading Mussolini from seeking his ends by force. Nothing would so encourage them. For in part the isolationists is suffering from despair. He saw a golden opportunity vanish under greedy clawing of the victors in the last war. He saw the great nations of the world, their most powerful enemy completely crushed, boot away the chance to make a new start. Instead, Lloyd George ran back home to get himself re-elected on a "Hang the Kaiser' platform; the Italians yelled "Fiume" until everyone had a headache.

The allied powers during the earlier years of the war made a secret arrangement for dividing up the spoils, of which the United States, according to American authorities, was kept in ignorance when it entered the war. Then after they got all they wanted out of the United States, they whipsawed Wilson at Paris and made peace terms which Germany felt were impossible to meet and which led eventually to the rise of Hitler. On top of that there were years of haggling over the war debts until the United States finally gave up trying to collect, although, it must be said, without trying very hard to make arrangements which would permit the allied powers to pay.

So America turned away in disgust. No, not completely away. While refusing to enter a League of Nations where there was great possibility that we would merely be subjected to the same treatment we encountered after the armistice, the United States did promote and lead, with France, in the launching of the Kellogg pact, by which practically all nations of the world pledged themselves not to resort to war as an instrument of national policy. It was a pledge of honor. Behind it was no force but that of public opinion.

As a people, we do not believe war is a good thing and through the Kellogg pact there was some hope that we might bring all nations to that view. That hope was vain insofar as the Japanese conquest of Manchuria was concerned. But we are hoping again that it will aid in dissuading Mussolini.

While we appear as a nation to be firmly convinced that no good can be served by the United States intervening in foreign quarrels, and by going to the aid of one side or the other, and that it is not our place to run around the world meddling in high politics like Col. House and Walter Hines Page did, if there is anything that we can say which will help bring leaders of other nations to their senses and induce them to accept other ways besides war of adjusting their disputes, most people will agree that it ought to be said.

That is what Secretary Hull has done. He has done it with scrupulous regard for the national pride of the respective parties and with insistence that we are not concerned with the merits of the controversy but only with discouraging resort to war as a means.

We are concerned with trying to prevent the use of a barbaric method of adjusting differences. Which is a good deal different from rushing into your neighbor's house, while he is in a dispute with his mother-in-law, and helping him out with a niblick.

Senator Pope, of Idaho, our one-man AEF, who has been in Europe predicting that we would resume our usual place in the line-up if another war is staged, is returning home. He gave up waiting for Europe to decide whether to accept the offer.

Torch Singer's Death on Farm Called Suicide

appear at the hearing. He previously had told them they could not leave the State without his permission.

While authorities said their investigation tended to support a theory the actress might have killed herself after a violent quarrel with the intoxicated Rogers, parents and close friends of Miss Hoey refused to believe she committed suicide.

The actress' father, Henry J. Hoey, St. Louis druggist, arrived in New York by plane today and immediately joined his wife, who recently came East to visit her daughter at her apartment. He plans to come here to take charge of his daughter's body.

Meanwhile, the Hoeys engaged Morris Ernst, New York criminal lawyer and well-known liberal, to represent them. He was en route here tonight after saying the bereaved parents "are not in any way vindictive or punitive in their attitude regarding the death of their daughter."

A battery of counsel, headed by James W. Gerard, former ambassador to Germany, has been marshaled by the Rogers.

Varying reports were received here as to the whereabouts of young Rogers' wife, the former Virginia Lincoln, of Cleveland, whom he married in 1929. Some were to the effect she had come here and others were that she had gone into seclusion in Cleveland.

Young Rogers' mother, through his attorney, J. Paul MacElree, issued a statement late today in which she emphasized her belief in his innocence. It read:

"Mrs. Rogers is firmly convinced that the death of Evelyn Hoey is a case of suicide. She bases this conclusion on the explanation given her by her son, the opinion of county authorities investigating the case and statements of witnesses who were at her son's home at the time of the tragedy. No other members of the family are expected in West Chester since her son has been released."

While Rogers was held in jail, officers took away his belt and necktie as a precaution against a possible attempt by him to end his life. They said that when he realized the actress was dead, he cried:

"Give me a gun to kill myself, too."

Quarantine Lifted.

Ickes' Housing, Tugwell's Rural Aid Plans Cut by Roosevelt.

in Washington, indicate that the new program will include approximately the following:

Relief—An additional $85,000,000 to be turned over to Hopkins for direct relief to be used until relief rolls are tapered off. Hopkins already has been given $715,000,000 from the $4,880,000,000 appropriation.

Housing Loses Out.

Rural electrification—Plans are being worked out to finance this project through self-liquidating loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. A total of $100,000,000 already has been earmarked for this work. This probably will be transferred to Hopkins or elsewhere. Use of RFC funds for this and other purposes may add millions of dollars to the sum originally set aside for works relief.

Housing—Only projects already started and a few on which only preliminaries are under way are expected to be completed by the PWA housing division. An allotment of $100,000,000 to the housing division is expected to be rescinded and used for other PWA projects.

PWA—Allotments are expected to total $427,000,000, as compared with a maximum of $900,000,000 provided in the act. Of this amount, $127,000,000 already has been allotted. This will be supplemented by $200,000,000 additional allotment and $100,000,000 to be transferred from the housing division. Restrictions placed around PWA projects are so strict, however, that it may not be possible to spend the money.

Tugwell's Plan Cut.

Rural Rehabilitation—An ambitious scheme for suburban housing apparently has been blocked by the President's insistence that housing must be made to pay for itself. Plans to care for 330,000 rural families will be cut to 160,000. Undersecretary Tugwell's original request for $525,000,000 is expected to be cut considerably.

Civilian Conservation Corps—An additional $75,000,000 will be allotted to bring its strength up to the legal limit of 600,000. President Roosevelt indicated that he expected the CCC to be a permanent organization, with the enrollment eventually cut to 300,000.

Grade elimination and roads—No explanation was made of what is to become of this program, which originally was considered one of the major parts of the works plan.

Hopkins the Victor.

Although everyone concerned expressed himself as satisfied with the President's changes in the program, Hopkins returned to Washington decidedly the victor in the controversy with Secretary Ickes. Neither would discuss the plan.

The extent to which Hopkins controls the situation can be seen from the following figures, showing money already allocated to him, or probably to be allocated:

Already allotted to WPA—$612,258,722.

Allotted or to be allotted for direct relief—$800,000,000.

Available, mostly for WPA—$1,225,000,000.

Total likely to be under Hopkins' control—$2,647,258,722.

Available for all projects not under Hopkins' control—$2,232,741,278.

Hopkins to Get Most.

Thus Hopkins is being given control of more than half of the entire $4,880,000,000 works and relief appropriation.

The plan, as it was explained here, is to allow Hopkins to put as many men and women to work as possible immediately, attempting to reach President Roosevelt's goal of 3,500,000 at work by November 1. As WPA jobs begin to run out, the PWA under Ickes would take up the slack, thus keeping the program going for a year.

The Ickes organizaton, however, will have to work much faster than it has in the past if it is to get under way with the restrictions placed upon it by the President. Contracts must be let for all projects by December 15. They must be completed within a year from that date. They must be located in areas in which labor is available and the cost to the Government must be not more than $850 per man per year.

5,000 Projects Pending.

No explanation has been forthcoming as to whether the controversy between Ickes and Hopkins as to the latter's right to reject PWA projects after they have been approved by Ickes has been settled. Hopkins has turned down 2,000 such projects and 5,000 more are before him for consideration.

The amount to be spent by PWA represents only 45 per cent of the cost of projects. This is to be paid by the Government and the remaining 55 per cent is to be paid by local communities. Thus, the total value of PWA projects, if they can be started in time, will approach $1,000,000,000.

Applications have been received for projects to cost $2,600,000,000. This means that more than half of them will have to be turned down. In almost every instance local communities have arranged to pay their share of the cost. On the other hand, local communities will contribute a very small amount, or nothing, to WPA projects.

Agents Dynamite Still Found in Fauquier Hills

Warrenton, Va., Sept. 13.—A giant still with a capacity of 40 gallons of liquor per day, was raided Thursday in Simper's Hollow, near Paris, Fauquier County, by Officer Sam Hall, of Warrenton, and four Federal men. No arrests were made. The still was not in operation, and officers later returned to the spot with D. C. Fewell, photographer, and a charge of dynamite to blow up the equipment.

Italy, Angered, Discounts Hope Of Settlement

Mussolini Is Expected to Push On Despite United Opposition.

By the United Press.

Rome, Sept. 13.—Amazed and angered at France's stand with Britain against breach of the League Covenant, Italy tonight struck back by virtually barring any settlement but war.

An official spokesman asserted that no proposal from the League committee of five, based only upon Ethiopia's good faith, will be accepted by Italy because Italy "through bitter experience knows little or no trust should be placed in Ethiopia."

In the same breath, the spokesman struck at United States Secretary of State Cordell Hull, who called upon Kellogg Pact signatories to preserve the peace.

Hull's statement, the spokesman said, "created a bad impression in the official world," because it was interpreted in many countries as an outspoken stand in favor of the League of Nations' attitude on the Italo-Ethiopian question. It would have been better, in the Italian view, if Hull had spoken "generally instead of expressing semi-commital views."

Skeptical of Peace Chances.

The spokesman said Italy will reveal her opinion as soon as the committee communicates the result of its work. Italian officials were skeptical of the committee's ability to find a solution.

The spokesman's guarded words were interpreted as an indication that Premier Benito Mussolini is bitter as France's decision forces him to face anew the question:

"Shall Italy risk war with the world or accept a peaceful settlement giving her a dominant position in Ethiopia?"

Officials studied the text of Premier Pierre Laval's strong words to the League Assembly at Geneva. There was unconcealed consternation at the purport of first extracts received in Rome.

Final decision, of course, rests with Il Duce. Yesterday he was reported planning a sharp retort to Sir Samuel Hoare's expression of the British stand. Now that he unexpectedly faces the hostility of both Britain and France, dominant League powers, there is conjecture as to whether he will make the anticipated international broadcast or press statement.

Expected to Go Ahead.

Diplomats believe the answer lies in Mussolini's character—that he will go ahead with his East African campaign as he has threatened "with the League, without it or against it."

The press was less bellicose, however, possibly indicating there still is a chance of avoiding war by a "deal."

Fascist leaders were shocked by the decision of Laval. They had expected the French premier to pay only lip service to the Covenant of the League.

Laval's statement was the second blow today. United States Secretary of State Cordell Hull's announcement calling attention of Italy and Ethiopia to the Kellogg Pact drew bitter reaction.

Hull's statement was interpreted to mean that Britain had succeeded in "dragging the United States into the dispute." Italy classified its attitude toward the Kellogg Pact three weeks ago by announcing it was not applicable to Africa.

The American announcement was regarded as tantamount to invocation of the pact. The whole thing was attributed to Britain's alleged efforts to whip up a world-wide united front against Italy.

Laval Backs Britain, Declares His Nation Will Fight for Peace

strong league, needed Britain's support at her back, more than she needed Italy's collaboration against Germany—even if it meant sending French troops to fight in an international army.

"I speak," he told the Assembly, "in the name of a country which does not fear war, but which hates it, a country which intends to remain strong and which is endowed with the highest military virtues, a country which is animated by a fierce desire for peace."

Gathering Is Tense.

He spoke so quietly that the Representatives of 54 nations gathered under the great canopy of the Assembly Hall had to bend to their earphones to hear him. But his words could not have been more impressive had they risen with crashing crescendo.

The Assembly seats and the public galleries were crowded with an alert, tense gathering of men and women well aware that the Geneva institution, projected from the idealism of Woodrow Wilson into a materialistic world, was on trial for its life. All knew that the little man in the black frock coat and inevitable white tie was to pronounce the words which would carry terrific consequence to the League.

Laval spoke without oratorical gestures. France and Britain, he said, have formed a united front in support of the League. He indicated that if need be, France is willing to sacrifice Italy's friendship if Italy disturbs the peace.

"It must be clearly understood," he said, "that there exists no disagreement between France and Britain.

"We place our hope on the co-operation of all peoples to realize our ideal of peace. * * * French representatives have constantly devoted their efforts to reinforcing the greatest international institution."

Laval emphasized that France's foreign policy is founded on the League.

Cites Offers to Italy.

Recalling with a brief show of emotion the signature of the Rome accord, Laval said at Stresa Mussolini indicated readiness to serve peace. "The price I attach to such solidarity," the French premier asserted, "is general peace."

"The Council and committee of five have not spared effort in an attempt to reach a solution which would take into account Italy's legitimate aspirations. Even now, it is understood, the five-power committee is offering Musolini a virtual protectorate over Ethiopia."

But, Laval went on, "we are all bound by a solidarity which fixes our duty. Our obligations are stated in the Covenant and France will not try to avoid them."

Declaring France will stand with Britain to the end in event of an Italo-Ethiopian war, Laval concluded with what was interpreted as an indication France would not shrink from sanctions. Referring to the League's previous successes, he added: "We succeeded yesterday. Shall we fail tomorrow? In this case, new situations still more moving for us all will require our examination."

Speaks Only Ten Minutes.

The fateful speech required only ten minutes to deliver. There was a tremendous burst of applause when he stepped away from the tribune.

The general impression in League circles was that Laval was trying hard for a peaceful solution but that if Mussolini turned down the committee of five's best offer France would back the League to the hilt.

The United Press learned Laval has communicated to Mussolini the concessions the powers are ready to make, with the attached condition that virtually all the 200,000 Blackshirts in East Africa can be withdrawn except a limited number to be incorporated in an international police force in Ethiopia.

Sir Samuel Hoare, obviously elated at the turn of events, departed by airplane for London immediately after Laval's speech to confer with the British cabinet.

Winchester, Va., Sept. 13.—Grade crossings slated to be eliminated in this section are located in five counties and the projects will involve expenditure of approximately $325,000, a survey of the plans reveals.

In Warren County it is proposed to construct an underpass on the Southern Railroad west of Linden at a cost of $40,000. Another project is an overpass east of Strasburg on the Southern which it is estimated will cost an additional $40,000.

In Shenandoah County, an underpass at Strasburg will cost $70,000 and in Page County, an overpass on the Norfolk & Western at Rileyville will cost $50,000. A $50,000 overpass at Markham, in Fauquier County, will require $50,000 and an underpass at Ivy to eliminate a C. & O. crossing, will cost $75,000, it is estimated.

Italy's Attack Due to Be Brief But Powerful

Is Expected to Stop After Part of Ethiopia Has Been Annexed.

By the United Press.

Addis Ababa, Sept. 13.—Premier Benito Mussolini's East African campaign probably will end suddenly after short, smashing thrusts from the north and south simultaneously, a high foreign authority declared tonight.

"I beliebe that under existing conditions in Europe, he said, "Mussolini will find himself content with what he will be able to gain in a short fight, encompassing, perhaps, the Adowa Plateau, parts of Webbe Shibelli, Ogaden and maybe Aussa."

However, Mussolini's ultra-modern army will not gain even those objectives without the attendant mass slaughter of modern warfare, for Emperor Haile Selassie is planning to put 750,000 more men in the field to "defend every inch of Ethiopian territory with our last drop of blood."

Mobilization Order.

The Negus today prepared a tentative draft of a general mobilization order. It has not been issued and is subject to re-drafting. Its publication awaits a propitious moment, which may come within a week.

Haile Selassie's new mobilization order would increase Ethiopia's army to approximately 1,000,000. The order was drafted at insistence of a certain group of the Tmperor's military advisers, but a second group won its argument for delay on grounds that such a move would be inadvisable in view of the delicate situation at Geneva.

Most of the men not already mobilized are totally unequipped to face the Italians' modern weapons, and they would become useful only after the first defenders were deleted.

A decision as to when to issue the mobilization order rests entirely with the emperor, who probably will await the outcome of the League negotiations.

At the first sign of an Italian advance either from north or south, observers believe that Ethiopian troops will attack before the invaders have moved ten miles. Ethiopian soldiers now are stationed within 20 miles of Eritrea in the north and Italian Somaliland in the south.

The Adowa plateau borders Eritsea. The Webbe Shibelli and Ogaden regions are in the south, bordering Italian Somaliland. Aussa is on the east-central frontier of French Somaliland. If Mussolini succeeds in gaining that territory, his troops would circle roughly half of Ethiopia's border circumference.

Many quarters believe the chief Italian attack will be on Aussa, instead of the far north and south. Aussa is easily accessible from Eritrea. The next step probably would be to cut off the railroad from Dbjiouti to Addis Ababa.

Some foreign observers question whether, in the event of a short campaign in which the Italians gained their objectives, the Negus would be able to induce his own troops to stop fighting and accept peace, based on territorial losses.

auxiliary gasoline tank. The motor failed to take the fresh supply and the plane landed at 90 miles an hour on a soft, plowed field before Hughes was able to get the landing gear down. He kept the powerful craft from turning over.

The propeller was bent, the landing gear damaged and there was slight damage to cowling. Hughes expressed confidence, however, that he would not be delayed in an attempt to break the West-East transcontinental flight record of 10 hours 2 minutes, held by Col. Roscoe Turner. He said the flight would be made at his convenence.

Today's flights were made over the course surveyed for the late Dr. Albert A. Michelson's experiments to measure the speed of light. An electric chronograph photographed and clocked Hughes.

Fredericksburg, Va., Sept. 13.—An all-time record was broken here in August when 75 persons were jailed for public drunkenness. In addition five intoxicated automobile drivers were arrested. The increased number of arrests was attributed unofficially to the fact that the city police force was enlarged early in August.

Shirley Temple Knows French, But Not Cents

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Gerald G. Gross,
Substituting for Nelson B. Bell.

Peter Lorre, wearing his own face plus an artificial scar, seems more hideous to us than Boris Karloff at his Frankensteinish best—or worst. Possessing some of the characteristics and mannerisms that distinguish Charles Laughton and Emil Jannings, it is no wonder he can make himself so thoroughly despicable in "The Man Who Knew Too Much" without over-exerting his acting strength.

But Peter Lorre is not the most interesting thing about "The Man Who Knew Too Much." What impressed us more than anything else yesterday, when the lights came back on in the Fox exchange screening room, was that here, by golly! is a gangster picture made by Englishmen which in many important respects is better than most of the Tommy gun-Colt-police siren variety of motion picture that comes out of Hollywood or Astoria.

This realization hit us squarely between the eyes because heretofore we've been satisfied to associate the British cinema with smart dialogue, tea, drawing rooms, Scotch and soda—almost anything but child-snatching and last-stand barricades. Learning that Gaumont-British, as well as the domestic Warner Brothers and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is capable of "The Man Who Knew Too Much" comes as a pleasant shock, whatever we may think of filmdom's emphasis of criminal violence.

About Edna and Nova.

Held together by a plot that has some novelty, though it may leak in spots; aided by good direction and containing comedy that is introduced more logically than was the case in those home-grown gangster thrillers that come to mind, "The Man Who Knew Too Much" is of sufficient stature to stand alongside our better pictures of similar theme. Nor have we forgotten, eight hours after attending the preview, that Edna Best has been better days, Nova Pilbeam is not nearly so acceptable as she was in "Little Friend" and that, from a technical standpoint, this celluloid foreigner suffers by comparison with the average American product.

Advance notices for this picture, which follows "My Heart Is Calling" at the Belasco tomorrow, have stressed the presence of Peter Lorre while relegating Leslie Banks to secondary mention. This is not precisely as it should be. Not only is Banks' name better known to local moviegoers—he had the title role in "Sanders of the River," recently at Loew's Fox, and Lorre, as far as we know, has never been seen here—but also he yields no ground to his heavily accented colleague in the matter of acting honors.

Congratulations are due the Belasco management, launching upon a new season in a redecorated house, for giving its patrons variety as well as quality. Though all of its first three features—"Loves of a Dictator," "My Heart Is Calling" and now "The Man Who Knew Too Much"—came out of the same factory, their diversity is as marked as their entertainment propensities are mutual.

Shirley's French and I. Q.

The most fetching Associated Press recording of the evening has to do with that blonde phenomenon known as Shirley Temple. It shows her up as a school pupil who has a 150-word French vocabulary, but thinks 47 cents is more than a half dollar. Her father, by the bye, is manager of a branch bank.

"She has a curious ineptitude with practical mathematics," Teacher Lilian Barkley said yesterday. She handles figures perfectly up to 50. Then she goes completely off the track."

This is the 7-year-old Shirley's first year in the special studio school, though last year she learned a thing or two about subtraction, multiplication and all that sort of thing. She identifies different animals readily, but is weak on geography. The fact that she has a greater knowledge of French than might be expected of such a mite was discovered by the Twentieth Century-Fox studio only this week and caused a major change in the production schedule.

Executives were about to hire a French child to "dub in" Shirley's lines in "The Little Rebel," this version being intended for consumption abroad, when they were informed that the heroine herself is capable of more than just an "Au Revoir" or a "Donnez-moi l'argent." So the dialogue double was not needed.

Miss Barkley says Shirley has a mental age of nine years and seven months, according to an intelligence test she took.

This is the most modest assertion that has come out of Hollywood in a very long time.

The Beaten Keaton.

The trustworthy A. P. is good for another item out of the movie capital. This one is more in a minor key. It helps explain the frozen face on Hollywood's frozen-faced comedian—Buster Keaton. He had a wife and a former wife appear against him in court yesterday, both demanding money. Mrs. Mae Elizabeth Keaton, who is suing for divorce, asked $750 a month temporary alimony, plus counsel fees, pending trial. Mrs. Natalie Keaton, sister of Norma and Constance Talmadge, charged the comedian is $3,300 in arrears on his alimony. She was his first wife. The judge continued both hearings until September 23 because the figure-in-between is working in a picture.

When a Mouse Conquers.

Thanks to "Steamboat Willie" and its successors, Walt Disney is the possessor of a tailless cat, a diploma from the Academy of Fine Arts of Buenos Aires, medals by the peck and a long meal ticket.

The Colony Theater (New York) labored and brought forth a mouse on September 28, 1928, Mickey Mouse, to be explicit. Since then he has taken on color and performed more ingenious tricks for his master, Mr. Disney, so that the seventh anniversary of his birth which is approaching assumes no little importance.

Mickey, now a veteran of the screen, has crashed the Encyclopaedia Britannica and played command performances for King George V. A medal has been pinned upon his tiny breast by the League of Nations and he has made about 85 per cent of the comedies whose stars are human apologetic for their existence.

Don't be surprised at anything he does. Don't be surprised if he shows up at the Palace on the morning of September 28, when a Mickey Mouse-Silly Symphony seminar is held to commemorate his natal day, and cuts his own birthday cake.

Kanyon But No Kops.

"Keystone Hotel," the Warner Bros. short which brings back Ford Sterling, Marie Prevost, Hank Mann and other slapstick comedy stars of the early 1920's, won't be shown on the new Metropolitan program, as announced earlier. It will be offered later in the month.

Taking its place, as a supplementary feature to "Annapolis Farewell," will be the handsome subject in color which was shown at the Earle a few weeks ago, "Romance of the West." Throwing out the "plot" and concentrating on the marvelous picture-shots of Grand Canyon and Yosemite Falls, "Romance of the West" will fit nicely as a substitute.

But we're still on edge waiting for "Keystone Hotel."

With the Amateurs.

The Drama Guild of Washington announces it will present six plays this season. Open tryouts will be held for all productions, dates to be set in the near future.

W. Hayes Yeager is president of the board of governors. Other officers and members are Miss Sibyl Baker, vice president; Frederick V. Rand, secretary; Lee D. Butler, treasurer; Eldred Wilson, business manager, and Edith I. Allen, Marvin Beers, DeWitt C. Croissant, C. Marshall Finnan, Anton Hardt, Gerald Miller, Mrs. Elizabeth K. Peeples, Jane Plummer Rice and Paul Bradbury Walter.

Mrs. Eugene Meyer is chairman of the committee on patrons. Mrs. Rowland White, jr., heads the membership committee, with Jane Plummer Rice as vice chairman. Marvin Beers is production manager, with Denis E. Connell in charge of selection of directors, casting and direction supervision, and Edith I. Allen head of stage settings.

From the following seven plays, five will be selected by the board of governors for production by the Columbia Players this season:

"The Shining Hour," "The Inheritors," "Sailors of Cattaro," "Candlelight," "Three Cornered Moon," "Buccaneer" and "Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model."

In addition, Columbia will repeat its hit of last season, "Uncle Vanya."

A general membership meeting will be held in the Mount Pleasant branch library on September 23, 7:30 p. m.

The Montgomery Players would have it known that subscriptions for the 1935-36 season are being sold at the office of the business manager, Irving M. Day, 405 Cumberland avenue, Chevy Chase. The telephone number is Wisconsin 4685.

Their first play, scheduled for October 12, is "Men Must Fight." Next, on December 7, comes "Bird in Hand." February 8 is the date of the third production, "The Ninth Guest," and the season will close on April 18 with "When Ladies Meet."

Star Regards Ominous Event

Jack Buchanan, British musical comedy star, in this scene from "Brewster's Millions," seems to have little respect for the combination of Friday and 13. How about yourself, this being one of those days? "Brewster's Millions" comes to the Rialto on Monday.

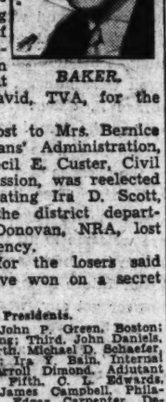
CINCINNATI, Ohio, Sept. 12.—A campaign was begun tonight to enroll over 4,500,000 State, county and municipal employes in the American Federation of Government Employes shortly before the convention adjourned. Earlier E. Claude Babcock was reelected president, resulting in the ousting of National Secretary Esther Penn and the defeat of Paul T. David, TVA, for the presidency.



BAKER.

Miss Penn lost to Mrs. Bernice Heffner, Veterans' Administration, of Detroit. Cecil E. Custer, Civil Service Commission, was reelected treasurer, defeating Ira D. Scott, president of the district department. John Donovan, NRA, lost the vice presidency.

Spokesmen for the losers said they would have won on a secret ballot.

Vice Presidents.

First District, John P. Green, Boston; Second, Miss Olding; Third, John Daniels, Philadelphia; Fourth, Michael D. Schaefer, Navy Department; Ira Y. Bain, Internal Revenue, and Carroll Dimond, Adjutant General's Office; Fifth, C. L. Edwards, Atlanta; Sixth, James Campbell, Philadelphia; Seventh, Edgar Carpenter, Detroit; Eighth, Rena Smith, St. Paul; Ninth, Charles H. Anderson, St. Louis; Tenth, none; Eleventh, Perry S. Myers, Seattle, and James Burns, San Francisco; Thirteenth, none.

On grounds of "constitutional rights," delegates of 11 Washington lodges bitterly fought a losing battle to prevent adoption of a resolution banning lobbying without consent of national headquarters. At the peak of wild disorder, James G. Yaden, chief examining division, Civil Service Commission, chairman of the constitution committee, shouted: "National officers have been advocating one thing while individuals and committees from lodges have been advocating contrary things on Capitol Hill." He blamed defeat of leave bills in the closing days of Congress on such procedure.

Opposition of conservatives on enrolling State, county and municipal employes melted after word was passed that William Green, A. F. L., "urgently desired" organization of that vast group into the trades union movement. Already, according to President Babcock, six charters are ready for issuance to as many groups.

Donovan Charges Pressed.

Radical charges against Donovan will be aired tomorrow before A. F. G. E. executive council, with Donovan absent. The accused said since the convention adjourned with a peace and harmony policy, he saw no reason to stay.

A last-minute storm arose when it was discovered the resolutions committee had neglected to report the resolution to permit strikes, picketing and mass demonstrations of Federal employes.

Racial discrimination issue again disrupted proceedings Thursday afternoon with Donovan on floor in passionate oratory for equality. Yaden thunderously assured the Donovan group A. F. G. E. is fair to Negroes, but admitted there is discrimination.

The convention was near adjournment when delegates became aware of contents of two letters from Representative Ramspeck, chairman of the House Civil Service Committee.

One letter charges "plain misstatement" of what happened on Capitol Hill in Seventy-fourth session. The other expresses resentment over Babcock's tactics and "efforts to use a committee for propaganda purposes."

$1,440 to $4,600 Jobs.

Examinations for jobs ranging from $1,440 a year to $4,600 a year have been announced by the Civil Service Commission as follows:

Physiotherapy aid, $1,800 a year and physiotherapy pupil aid, $1,440 a year. Optional subjects for physiotherapy pupil aid are: hydrotherapy, massage, remedial gymnastics and general physiotherapy.

Senior safety engineer, $4,600 a year, division of labor standards, Department of Labor. The closing date for the above examinations is September 30.

Additional information may be obtained at the office of the Civil Service Commission, Seventh and F streets northwest.

Dr. Herbert F. Prytherch, Bureau of Fisheries, has been elected president of the National Shellfisheries Association and chairman of the State Board of Directors of North Carolina Fisherman's Co-operative Association.

Youth Wants Tips.

A youngster with a yen for adventure made the following written inquiry at the Federal Bureau of Investigation:

"I am a boy of 13 years of age and would appreciate it very much if you would give me a few details about Department of Justice work. I would like to know about trailing people without being noticed and how to look for clews and to make them lead up to people. How would I get to speak with someone I was trailing? This is about all the information I want. If you send me some good tips I would gladly accept them."

Things as They Are

Business Pictured as Small in Volume and Spotty; Buying on Selective Basis.

By Samuel Crowther

THE phrase "public confidence" has been so overworked for so many years that the conviction is firm in many hearts that good business and prosperity are the result of confidence. In this way of thinking, the stimulation of confidence is a necessary preliminary to the stimulation of business, and hence any review of conditions which does not end on a high note of optimism is churlish.

It is true that no one ever got rich by being a bear on America. But it is equally true that no one ever got rich by just being a bull. The sky-is-the-limit boys of 1929 are qualified to speak on that point. An optimist is no more to be trusted than a pessimist. Neither faces the facts. But it is curious how many men still ask: "Are you optimistic or pessimistic?" Taking an attitude means that one intends to disregard the facts.

The facts are that business today—which means prosperity today—is small in volume and extraordinarily spotty. A few lines are making money and the men in those lines are moderately happy—although bothered by the mounting taxes. The ability of some concerns to make money is stirring others to thinking that maybe they also can make money. The blank lethargy of a few years ago has passed. Men in general are getting around to the point where not only will they fight for business but also they will fight laws which block business. They are not quite so ready as before to scramble for any crumbs that drop from the Government table, although a few will match any politician in about-facing to get governmental patronage.

* * * *

SUCH men are in the minority. Self-reliance is replacing supine dependency. That is being discovered by the collectors for the Democratic National Committee who blithely started after contributions from business executives to return a part of the benefits they received from public funds. The lack of gratitude is generating some nasty threats. These are futile, for the color of the business liver is not so lily-white as it was before the NRA decision. Washington, it has been discovered, cannot make good on its threats.

It is quite as wrong to speak of business men as a unit as it is to speak of labor as a unit. To do so is to fall into the manner of the many self-appointed "spokesmen." I am trying to describe the ground-swell sentiment which is not, as yet, wholly articulate. More men know what they are against then what they are for.

The volume of business, as evidenced by monthly carloadings, was, for the first three weeks of August, both absolutely and relatively smaller than in either August, 1933, or August, 1934, and relatively smaller than in December, 1932. The highest point reached by carloadings during the Roosevelt Administration was during March-April, 1934, when they almost touched 85 per cent on a scale on which the carloadings for January, 1930, appear above 95 per cent. These are the Railway Age figures.

* * * *

SINCE business in this country has increased in volume at a rate of 4¼ per cent a year since the Civil War, and that rate is apparently necessary to provide general employment, all production figures presented as index numbers based on averages of years before 1929 need to be read with the 4¼ per cent in mind. If the volume of business today were that of 1927-29, we should not be as well off as we were then—for there are more people in the country now than there were then. Figures based on the midsummer of 1932 or March, 1933, mean nothing at all.

For instance, the farmers will this year, it is estimated, have an income of about $6,700,000,000. This is the largest income since 1930, but in that year the farm income was above $8,000,000,000 and in 1929 it was around $10,000,000,000. The only curves showing grand swings upward are that of the public debt and the ratio of the expenses of government to national income.

The lack of volume is the reason for unemployment. Roughly the gainfully employed are about evenly divided between those who produce goods and those who service goods. Those who produce goods are about evenly divided between those who produce for consumption and those who produce the more durable goods which are not immediately consumed. The classifications are not very exact—a house may last from 2 to 30 years while an automobile, which is also classed as durable, is apt to be more of an expense than a utility after four or five years.

The small volume of goods being produced is not enough to require the services of more than a fraction of the great army of service workers. The crop control program, to take one example, aims at the reducing of volume and in consequence, although many farmers are better off than they have been since 1930, farm communities as a whole are not correspondingly well off because of the smaller demand for services.

* * * *

THE principal industrial upturns have been in automobiles and electrical household equipment and, in the main, orders for equipment have come from these industries or others dependents upon them. The revival in building is not as yet impressive.

The strangest part of the scene is the selectiveness of the buying. Nothing in the nature of a general revival led by the automobile industry seems to be at hand. This leads to the thought that we may be already in the early stages of inflation—that a movement out of money and into goods may be under way. No statistical facts can be adduced to support such an opinion. Why such an opinion should be advanced without facts needs explaining.

Gallinger's 12-Hour Day.

In this day of unemployment and shortened hours of work there is something tragically ironical in the perpetuation of the 12-hour day for nurses in a hospital operated by the Nation's Capital. Throughout the period while the NRA was working heroically to improve working conditions this institution directly under the control of Congress was forced to exact 80 hours of service per week from young women. That is twice the maximum working period permitted under the codes.

Dr. Bocock's reference to this discredited practice as "a very anomalous condition" manifests almost too much restraint on the part of this long-suffering executive. If young women in commerce or industry were required to work in accord with this nineteenth century standard, their employer would be immediately blackballed as the worst kind of chiseler. But when such chiseling is ordered by Congress, in spite of vigorous protests from the superintendent of Gallinger, it arouses altogether too little indignation.

The effect of the 12-hour day at Gallinger is aggravated by the inadequacy of the staff. This municipal hospital has just about half the personnel that would be required to meet accepted standards. Since 1931 its patients have increased 125 per cent; its staff scarcely at all. Apparently the nurses are overworked all the time they are on duty as well as being kept in service for excessive periods. When these distressing facts have been stated it is scarcely necessary for Dr. Bocock to add that the result is increasing sickness among them.

The continued existence of such conditions when the Government is spending billions of dollars on "made work" is something more than a disgrace. It makes a travesty of the District's efforts to maintain an efficient community hospital. Since this obvious injustice to the staff of Gallinger has not aroused Congress to make amends, it is to be hoped that the flagrant inconsistency between the Gallinger policy and the work-relief policy will be recognized before another appropriation bill is voted.

A Sign Of Better Times.

A mob of farmers recently assembled at Plattsburg, Mo., to prevent a foreclosure sale of farm property by intimidating the United States marshal and his assistants who were in charge. They succeeded in routing the marshal by resorting to the terroristic methods that have made foreclosure sales impossible in many parts of the country during the depression years. But this time the ringleaders in the riot were arrested on charges of interfering with a Federal officer in line of duty. If convicted, they face a maximum penalty of $5,000 fine and a year's imprisonment.

This unusual sequel to the Missouri riot is a highly encouraging sign that more normal times have returned—that we are entering a period when the legal rights of the creditor will again be recognized and protected. Resistance to foreclosure proceedings could be condoned, and indeed justified, when farm lands were a drug on the market. Sympathy naturally lay with the dispossessed debtor in such cases. He often lost everything he owned, when, under more normal conditions he would have had a considerable equity in his farm and probably would have been able to obtain an extension of his mortgage when it fell due.

Today, however, through Government refinancing of farm mortgages, payment of benefits, increases in prices and improvement in demand for his products, the farmer debtor has been given the relief to which he was entitled and some gratuities in addition. It is no longer regarded as a crime for the creditor to assert his rights against a debtor who fails to discharge his obligations. Assurance that the right to foreclose can be exercised without fear of obstruction is more important than the actual exercise of the right. In fact, most of the large financial institutions and banks that hold mortgaged property are extremely reluctant to sell it under foreclosure, if there is any prospect that the debtor will be able to resume payments.

However, the knowledge that foreclosure may follow failure to meet interest charges is a great incentive to prompt payment and a necessary protection to the creditor. Denial of the right of foreclosure except for limited periods of time, under the pressure of a great emergency, in the long run works serious injury to debtor as well as creditor classes. It withdraws capital from areas that would benefit by the use of borrowed funds, and it brings undeserved losses to people of small means whose savings are invested in mortgages through the medium of savings banks and insurance companies.

A Matter Of Self-Respect.

France has spoken, through the mouth of Premier Laval, and the line-up of world opinion against Mussolini's approaching war of aggression is now impressively strong.

Until yesterday the Italian dictator doubtless hoped that he could use American neutrality to his advantage, as it well might operate if the United States should oppose such sanctions as a League blockade of Italy. But the Secretary of State has properly served notice on Rome that this country would resent subjection "to the hazards and uncertainties that must inevitably accrue" from war. President Roosevelt has now specifically confirmed this rebuff to the Italian claim of complete liberty of action against Ethiopia. And from this position it is a short step to indorsement of any policy upon which the League may decide if Italy deliberately defines herself as an aggressor.

These are exciting and momentous events, easily recognizable as the world-shaking tremors which must always accompany any development of vital significance in the history of mankind. But interest in a drama in which the United States is by its very power doomed to be a participant—constructive or destructive—should not conceal the fact that strong words do not of themselves bridge the gulfs across which civilization must slowly engineer its path.

There is little likelihood that the mass pressure which has been focused on Mussolini will stay his hand. Whatever the risks involved in going ahead, they are less than those now involved for him in turning back. A fabled king of France, with 20,000 men, "marched up a hill and then marched down again." But Mussolini, apostle of force, glorifier of war, champion of bombast, can not climb down with equal ease. To save his face, if for no other reason, there has to be some bloodletting. There has to be an Italian victory at Adowa. And that sacrifice to sacro egoismo is due any day.

In addition to the impossibility of stopping Mussolini now there is the fact that it is far easier to advocate than to operate international police action. First the League Council must unanimously define Italy as an aggressor, though in this respect at least Mussolini seems inclined to give Geneva whole-hearted co-operation. When that is done sanctions of an economic and financial character are, under Article 16 of the Covenant, supposed to be applied immediately by all League members. In practice, of course, the Council would have to recommend a specific and relatively simple program, necessitating the greatest care and precision in drafting. Military sanctions would be still more complicated, but they are as yet not over the horizon.

In short, even the mildest sanctions would require painstaking preliminary effort in an unexplored and unprecedented field. Presumably the British and French governments, since theirs would be the major burden, are already co-operating in preliminary studies to be recommended to the Council at the appropriate moment. But all this, as none knows better than Mussolini, will take time to work out.

It is primarily because of the unpreparedness of the League for sanctions—a deficiency inherent in its essentially consultative and non-sovereign character—that both Sir Samuel Hoare and Premier Laval stressed the continuing possibilities of conciliation in their addresses to the League Assembly. The trouble is that those possibilities, all of which depend upon drastic concessions by Ethiopia, will all but disappear as the Italians deploy their troops across the frontier. From that moment sacrifices by Ethiopia will be exacted instead of voluntary. In other words what is necessary to save Mussolini's face is also calculated to close the door to any satisfactory settlement.

That the dilemma should be so essentially absurd, it is vital to realize, is at bottom due to the fact that Italy is now operating under the most primitive form of government. No Italian voice can be raised against the dictatorship for a satisfactory compromise. No constructive help in this crisis can come from the great people who are prostrate at the feet of their posturing tyrant.

That fact is what makes the issue so much greater than the fate of Ethiopia. It is the self-respect of civilization, trampled by an arrogant and ruthless megalomaniac, which the over-strained machinery of peace at Geneva is working desperately to save.

Dictator Or King?

Despite considerable clamor to the contrary, the public opinion of Greece appears to be turning toward a limited monarchy—and, in the choice that lies before it, a limited monarchy may well be the better form of government for modern Greece. The history of the post-war Hellenic state has been a history of factional strife, with too many interludes of armed revolt. For that country—and for whatever reasons—the republican highway has been cluttered with obstacles. The Greeks now near a crossroads where they may have to choose between a king subject to a carefully considered constitution and a dictator subject to no constitution at all.

On the one hand, the royal candidate is obvious: the dethroned George II. On the other hand, the immediate invisibility of a likely dictator is no proof that he does not exist. If Venizelos is too old, there are others. In these times, the opportunity has an uncanny ability to produce the Mussolini, the Pilsudski, the Hitler.

After all, so far as Greece is concerned, there are worse forms of government than a constitutional monarchy—and one of those forms is a dictatorship. Perhaps the return of King George would bring the Hellenes a greater measure of domestic order and economic recovery. What the coming of a dictator brings, sooner or later, already can be seen in Rome and Berlin.

With An Eye On 1936.

President Roosevelt's remarkable ability as a conciliator has never been seriously questioned. It is further attested by the way in which the fundamental differences between Mr. Ickes and Mr. Hopkins have been apparently liquidated at Hyde Park.

In theory the PWA administrator was granted some degree of satisfaction. Actually, however, the Hopkins program is to go forward under conditions that may virtually eliminate the PWA from the gigantic work-relief spending program. The President has merely given Secretary Ickes another chance to accomplish the impossible, while Mr. Hopkins pushes full-steam ahead with the boondoggling.

As to the relative merits of the two plans presented to Mr. Roosevelt there can be no question. Mr. Ickes wants a substantial part of the $4,000,000,000 work relief fund for low-cost housing, elimination of grade crossings and other socially important improvements. On the contrary, Mr. Hopkins seems to think only in terms of "jobs," without regard for the usefulness of the work to which the unemployed are put. His objective is to end doles. But in rushing pell-mell toward that goal, he overlooks the fact that many of the "jobs" he is creating are only faintly camouflaged doles. Often the beneficiaries of this scheme are merely continuing the compensated trifling they were doing while "on relief."

The President voices his customary rosy "expectation" that projects of this kind may give way to more substantial undertakings next spring. But the handicaps which he has imposed upon the PWA make it doubtful whether new improvements of lasting value can be undertaken. Considering essential precautions, three months is an extremely short period for the completion of plans and the letting of contracts on major projects. Moreover, few such undertakings could be completed in a year, and even fewer can be attempted under the cost limitation of $850 per man year.

In effect, then, the compromise plan is a surrender to the Hopkins theory. Its essence is panic spending. No heed is given to the improved business conditions or to the complete failure of a previous attempt to curtail unemployment effectively by this reckless procedure.

The President's insistence that the $4,000,000,000 entrusted to his discretion be spent as quickly as possible, regardless of results obtained, invites the assumption that he is trying to create a feeling of mass contentment, however transient, on the eve of the 1936 election. No doubt the country will accept that viewpoint reluctantly. But if the planless outpouring of these billions continues as it has begun, and as it is projected in the latest announcement from Hyde Park, that conclusion will be inescapable. For there is no other reasonable explanation.

Blaring Radios.

It may be necessary for New York City authorities to employ audiometers and noisemeters for determining noise and its intensity. All that ought to be needed here is the one wideawake citizen who says, in a letter on this page, that he "can hear radios half a square away or across the street." Of course this Washingtonian is far from being alone in suffering from radioitis.

Our correspondent is obviously not one of those cranks who, owning no radio, is ignorant of the pleasures thence to be derived. Nor is he demanding condign punishment for inconsiderate dial-twisters. On the contrary, his language is exceedingly mild in comparison with the offense. He simply suggests in neighborly and kindly fashion that something be done to "help the folks to use their radios more conservatively."

There are some very real reasons why radio owners should keep them toned down to a radius of one or two rooms. Not only may they be disturbing someone in the next apartment, but the constant blaring is equally as bad for themselves. Eardrums, nerves, work and indeed health itself may become seriously affected merely from the thoughtlessness of a small minority.

Some people are born with radios, others acquire them, and a third miserable class have 'em forced upon them. It is for the last class that some consideration is sadly overdue.

Of course 5-cent cigars have never been anything to write home about, but we can remember when they didn't have to wrap 'em in cellophane to keep 'em from falling to pieces in the showcase.

No Fascism in Switzerland.

From the St. Louis Star-Times.

One often is moved to wonder what the people of European nations see in a Fascist state, that they should wish to inflict it upon themselves. The answer in at least one case is that they don't see anything in it.

That is the answer of the Swiss voters, who were asked to authorize a general revision of the country's constitution along lines that would lead to an executive dictatorship, a la Mussolini and Hitler. They turned it down in a national referendum, 343,000 to 193,000. Switzerland hasn't much of a reputation for liberalism, and its tolerance is mostly toward international activities, but the institution of political democracy evidently retains its hold in one little section of the Old World.

Blaring Radios.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For some time I have been thinking of asking someone on your staff to write an article on using radios. Frequently when I am walking the streets, I can hear radios half a square away or across the street. You'd think the owners were trying to entertain people on the street instead of themselves.

For various reasons the radio owner should respect or have sympathy for others. Some may have to sleep through the day; some go to bed early at night; others may be on beds of sickness. Some of our cities are forbidding autos to toot their horns during certain hours and to make other kinds of noises. I think a little article along this line would help the folks to use their radios more conservatively and think of others whom they might be disturbing.

I have a large radio and use it very often, but I keep it toned to my room—not to the next corner down the street. If other folks would do likewise, no doubt a great good would be accomplished.

A RADIO OWNER.

Jeffersonian Principles.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The better way to counteract communistic propaganda and to make United States safe for democracy is not by the suppression of free speech or by appeal to the Soviet government but, rather, by elimination of all socialistic or communistic experiments by our Government and the establishment in their place of strict fidelity to the principles of Jeffersonian democracy. The democratic form of government established by Jefferson and his compatriots is easily demonstrable as the best of all forms of government, and when strictly adhered to will justify itself in every way in contrast to the dictatorships of Russia, Germany or Italy.

The fundamental principles of democracy are (1) Strict construction of the Constitution; (2) Conformity to the principle that that government is best which governs least; (3) Reduction of governmental expenses to the minimum consistent with preservation of law and order; (4) Equal rights for all, special privileges for none; (5) "Freedom of commerce with all nations; political relations with none." It will be observed that the present Democratic Administration has violated every one of these tenets.

We should repeal the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution and the income tax and then establish a system of taxation based not upon the ability to pay but upon equivalent services rendered by the Government to the taxpayer, and which is accurately determined by the rental value of land. This program of Jeffersonian democracy would involve, of course, the immediate cancellation of subsidies to agriculture and the favors given to the American Federation of Labor by New Deal legislation.

HENRY WARE ALLEN.

Wichita, Kans., Sept. 11.

Interest Swings To The Assassin.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For the past few days the focal point of interest of the American public has been centered on the assassination of the late Senator Huey P. Long of Louisiana. The death of the Senator was quite an unfortunate occurrence and was well worthy of the public sympathy and respect which was accorded it. But the excitement over the loss of the Senator should not blind the eyes of the American public to one aspect of the incident which was equally as ruthless, if not more so, than the actual assassination itself. I speak of the brutal shooting of Dr. C. A. Weiss, jr.

It seems agreed by medical authorities and those informed that the deceased doctor was temporarily insane with the thought of martyring himself for the cause of his State. The plausibility of his being in that state at the time of the act does somewhat lessen the brutality of his deed; it also enhances the ruthlessness and savagery of his assassins, who themselves were in their right minds and were fully conscious of their actions.

After he had fired the fatal shot, the gun was deflected from the doctor's hands; he then was practically helpless and could have easily been taken into custody. However, under the guise of protection, the late Senator's bodyguards shot him, the first shot felling him on the same marble floor upon which his victim had stumbled when shot. While he lay there prone and utterly helpless, 40 more shots were brutally and heartlessly poured into his body until it became a shivering mass of flesh and hot steel!

I do not intend to detract from the assassination of the well known and admired public figure that the Senator was, nor to vindicate the martyred doctor, but I do wish to express the belief that the ruthless shooting of this doctor was one of the most outlandish usurpations of the authority vested by the law in its servants, or those whom it gives similar authority, that has occurred within the last decade.

A. READER.

Washington, Sept. 11.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I commend your editorial upon Senator Long. I disagreed with both his method and his principles, yet condemn in most emphatic terms and feel outraged at the manner of his death.

Regarding the proposal to erect a monument for the purpose of attributing to his assassin the qualification of a "patriot:" a patriot does not shield himself behind a marble column or shoot his victim in the back. A patriot does not violate the laws of his country so long as he agrees with their correctness. If laws are imposed upon a people against which they generally revolt, a patriot may sacrifice himself to overthrow them, but not so here. An insane wretch may mistakenly conceive himself to be a patriot as did Guiteau, who everyone now concedes was insane. A jury will convict any slayer who occasions a death under atrocious circumstances, no matter how crazy the perpetrator may be. No claim of insanity is made for Dr. Weiss.

Some men kill for personal grievances. So we have other possibilities upon which to reach a conclusion. Was Dr. Weiss a patriot or was he insane? Was he actuated by vindictive personal animosity? I think the latter must have been true. Shall we erect commendatory monuments to such?

The Old-Time Saloon.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The old-time bartender, according to Westbrook Pegler, was just a yegg who handled a bungstarter in place of a machine gun. Well, of course, tough "joints" need tough barkeepers. But there were other places where the man behind the drinks was quite human. He would put you wise to a job and what politician to see about getting it. He would act as peacemaker often by setting them "up on the house." At other times he would play the peacemaker between some woebegone rumhound and his irate wife.

When you got ready to go on a bat, you could leave part of your bank roll with him. After the festivities were over, you withdrew these savings and went on another one. He did not encourage overeating at the free lunch table. But if you were hungry, he didn't discourage it, either. Naturally, you had to take him into your confidence. You were down, but you had the promise of a job in a nearby factory. Then there would be a gentleman's agreement. You were welcome to fill up for quite a spell on the understanding that part of your future salary if, and when, you ever got any, was to be spent over the bar.

Or else, if such an arrangement was too much bother, you could stand, for instance, in front of O'Mahoney's William Tell House over in Baltimore before the fire. At noon, and 6 p. m. sharp, the factory whistles would blow and the men would come crowding into the place. That was your chance. Not having the price, you made a dive for the lunch table. It was all there—from liverwurst to sauerkraut. Grabbing two forks, one in each hand for quicker results, you could do yourself a lot of good in no time at all. Then out and head for the nearest pump.

The old-time saloon was O. K., no matter what Mr. Pegler thinks.

FRED VETTER.

Washington, Sept. 7.

The Eternal "Why?"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Something near a year ago someone suggested through your letter department that Christianity was the remedy for our Nation's ills. Provided too much is not made of it and we do not have Christ promising too much, the writer believes that is a correct view. We would do well to heed the advice.

It should be remembered, however, we have no promise of a very good heaven in this world. If everybody lived as Christ lived no doubt the best possible would be accomplished for all of us. But all that does not or would not justify the creation of this poor old world or any of the creatures living here.

If there is a God, as he is understood, why would He have created such a place? Answer to that question might go far toward bringing this country to Jesus' feet and His way. Who can find the answer? We are searching everywhere for it and have not found it.

The Post Impressionist

But Are Dogs Men's Betters?

Post Office, Saturday.

YOU never know what the most innocently intentioned column will bring forth. That is sometimes one of the rare joys of being a columnist. At other times, it is one of the columnist's many sorrows.

Lately we wove a rosy wreath for certain canines—and today a constant reader plucks therefrom a lesson against all masculine human beings.

Its writer heads it in a fearsomely militant manner. It is headed: "Subject—Bull-Terriers." And it is directed to us—and against all men.

It begins:

"Dear Post-Impressionist: Is this an expected answer? You whistle—and I come running.

"Do I stoop to conquer? One whose face has long been licked by hound-dawgs, one who is nursemaid to a Pekingese, should have no qualms about the company of bull-terriers such as you describe. But my capacity for 'knock-taking' is no longer equal to that of your rat-fighters. It measurably decreased after the plaster fell for the third time. Today, even if your woman-hating friend, the Major, expressed an opinion, I should probably only purr.

"However, I do mildly protest one passage in your column on those terriers. You say, in speaking of their breeders' endeavors to produce dogs among whom courage and intelligence would predominate:

"'Beauty (to the breeders) was another matter. In fact, it didn't—then—matter. The sporting gentlemen gladly sacrificed good looks to qualities more—so they were considered in those days—masculine.

"'If you are telling me, then I am telling you: it is too-too bad that sporting gentlemen do not bring their dog wisdom to bear on their human affairs. I feel as did the dwarf in Grimm's Fairy Tales:

"'Something human is dearer to me than all the wealth of the world.'

"Sure enough, Love was made blind for a good reason! Women, of course, know the practical value of beauty, and some of them employ it consciously, frankly, effectively—though it can't be said of them that they sacrifice quality for good looks, when choosing a mate.

"On that score there is little for which men may be commended."

Now can you guess this correspondent's gender? . . .

Anyhow, after that blow to masculine conceit—and to half the art of dunderheads like Praxiteles—this member of the beautiful sex turns from esthetic rebuke to social criticism.

Says she: "Really, such matters as an endeavor to restore any breed of dogs to a lost estate seem idle gestures in these serious days. However much we might like it, there is no release from the severe necessity of meeting modern problems with the experience of yesterday—although 'the same returns not, save to bring the different.'

"By all means, let us perpetuate the desirable masculine qualities. Yet by all means let us remember that there are some masculine qualities which even a bull-terrier would resent as an inheritance.

"There are vanity and self-importance, for instance—evidences of child-psychology. Similar evidences are boasting and bullying.

"No, no! The dog-breeders are futile. While they develop sterling qualities in animals, the Peter Pans of the world are manufactured in the nursery—later to become a nuisance and a menace to society. So long as politicians, statesmen and dictators have the orientation of children in charge, the avoidance of catastrophe continues difficult."

You see, it's only the mothers that this correspondent considers should be consulted.

She says: "Mothers of new-born men and women have the power to fashion those children's fate, to make self-reliant, truly adult, courageous, unselfish, really normal human beings of them—or so to warp their development that they never grow beyond the stage of selfish, self-indulgent youngsters.

"Belief in masculine superiority," she says, "must give way before a realization of the racial importance of women as mothers. Genuine beauty will never flourish until it grows out of the life of all the people."

Even as the proverbial cynic, the more this correspondent sees of men, the better she likes dogs. But, returning to the dogs, if not going to them, she concludes upon one note for which the Post-Impressionist could wish a hearty echo.

"Before multiplying bull terriers in America," she concludes, "the apartment-house dogs ought to be given a chance to voice their opinion of apartment-house life. No dog with brains would choose the life of an apartment house dog."

Whereupon—after declaring, "I am always an attentive listener to your Column," she signs herself:

Not The American Way.

New York, Sept. 13.

RECENT comment in these dispatches on the case of the perfidious White Sox who threw some World Series ball games and were condemned to lifelong disgrace draws an interesting retort from L. W. Beaven, of Chicago.

"When you said the Black Sox (the newspaper name for the erring brothers)—all of them—were underpaid what was the theory?" Mr. Beaven inquiries. "I am interested in economics and business teamwork. The only way I can see that they could have been underpaid is that they did not get the money that their contracts called for. I doubt that. Your theory is that Charley Comiskey (then owner of the White Sox) took too big a share of the gate receipts.

"That assumes that the Black Sox were legally incompetent when they signed or signed with their fingers crossed. The impairment by any means of the solemn obligations of contracts strikes at orderly government.

"Old Judge Landis pulled the same bone when he was on the bench, trying a lad who worked for a bank, as I recall it. The lad swapped wallets with the bank. The judge said he was underpaid. So it appears the way to rob a bank is first to get a job at a low salary. Then you can do it with impunity."

• • • •

MR. BEAVEN, an employer himself, apparently does not know the contents of the standardized contract by which all players in baseball, from the leaky roof minors to the Yankee Stadium, are bound to accept any rate of pay which the club owner, in his not always lavish generosity, sees fit to offer. This is an interesting legal curiosity.

Under the standard contract once a young ball player enters the service of a bush league magnate he becomes the property of his boss. If at the end of one season he has developed into a Babe Ruth worth, say, $100,000 cash at the winter ivory auction, the money goes to the employer.

Theoretically, the new owner may offer him as little as $1,000 a year, even though he developed a box office appeal which attracts $100,000 a season through the turnstiles. If he wants to quit, that is his privilege, but it is a cheerless privilege at best. Because all the other employers in the baseball business, major and minor, are bound by an agreement between themselves not to give him a job or even discuss terms with him. That would be called tampering—a most unethical practice—for which the club owners have provided severe penalties.

• • • •

SOME employers are prosperous, others poor; some are generous, others notoriously stingy. But once the player has put his name to his first contract as an ambitious kid he is hooked for life. I do not contend that this is the worst form of slavery, but in the case under consideration Mr. Comiskey was the stingiest magnate of his time in his dealings with his players.

He was a generous host whose keg parties were famous, but his White Sox who threw the World Series were paid very paltry wages, although they were regarded as the best team ever assembled. If they had been at liberty to shop around for better teams they could have had twice or three times the money that Charlie paid them. He knew this, but he also knew he had them. So he took full advantage of the boycott agreement which obliged them to take what he offered or get out of baseball.

Nor was there any end to their contracts with him. They were subject to renewal at his terms until the players were all washed up. Then he could fire them on ten days' notice. In fact, under the standard agreement the club owner always has the right to fire a man on ten days' notice, though the player is bound to him for the full term and is then bound to renew at the owner's figure, unless he wants to retire.

• • • •

SO it will be seen that, although baseball is said to be the American national game, the provisions of the contract are distinctly contrary to the normal American way of business between employer and employe. It might be possible, for example, to take advantage of the necessity of a hundred thousand workmen today to sign them up for skilled labor at, say, $4 a day.

But a continuing clause in the agreement would soon arouse violent objections if the original employer should sell his laborers to another operator for so much cash per head, and future owners in a rising market, should insist on paying exactly what they pleased regardless of the value of their work until the men were too old to be of any use.

I doubt that the impairment of the solemn obligations of such a contract would strike a very serious blow at orderly government. On the contrary, its enforcement would have a worse effect.

Probably Judge Landis erred in the theory that low wages mitigated the offense of robbing a bank, but we have learned much about banks in recent years, and maybe the old judge merely felt that the bank should have applied the Golden Rule instead of the statutes.

Twain Epigrams

By

William Lyon Phelps

THE one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Mark Twain will be accompanied by a number of books as well as magazine articles; here is a jolly volume of about 150 pages, edited by Cyril Clemens with a prefatory note by Stephen Leacock, called "Wit and Wisdom of Mark Twain."

It is a collection of anecdotes and short stories; and is good to have within easy reach; because one can take it up, open it anywhere, and enjoy oneself.

• • • •

Some of these anecdotes are not truly ascribed to Mark Twain; owing to his immense reputation, other stories have been attached to his name. However that may be, here is an anecdote on Page 11, which I know to be true, for I was in the audience at that time. He spoke at "Graduation-Exercises" (Hartford Public High School) and one of the smallest boys had won for his prize in spelling a copy of Webster's Dictionary. Mark Twain said, "This is a very interesting and useful book, my son. I have studied it often, but I never could discover the plot." As I remember it, he said "the hang of the story." The boy was Willie Matson.

• • • •

Here are some others. When he was about to cross the Sea of Galilee, he asked the boatman the fare, and the boatman said four dollars; Mark exclaimed, "No wonder Our Lord walked."

He shocked the Rev. Joseph Twichell by telling him at the end of a sermon that the sermon was good, but that every word of it was in a book he owned. Twichell wanted to know the name of the book, and was informed that it was a dictionary.

At a dinner one night he took a mouthful of soup so hot that it hurt. He turned his head and released it, and instead of apologizing, said "Some darn fools would have swallowed that."

Hell-Bent For Election

Warburg Chides F.D. For His Absentee Farm Program.

James P. Warburg, formerly one of the economic advisers of President Roosevelt, who appointed him financial adviser to American delegation to the World Economic Conference in 1933, has written an appraisal of the New Deal, the seventh chapter of which appears today. Mr. Warburg has long been a personal friend of Mr. Roosevelt. He has given his appraisal the general title, "Hell-Bent for Election." These articles do not necessarily reflect the editorial opinion of The Post. They are presented as an authoritative and penetrating analysis.

VII.

By James P. Warburg.

IN the preceding article I have stated what I conceive to be Mr. Roosevelt's major purpose—that is, the centralization of power in the Federal Government, to the end that the Federal Government may be able to give the people "a more abundant life." I have stated that I do not believe in this purpose, because, as Mr. Roosevelt himself pointed out a few years ago, centralization of power in the Federal Government is not in this country the way to arrive at "a more abundant life"—unless we wish to change all our basic concepts as to what constitutes freedom and happiness.

(I might have added that, when Mr. Roosevelt seeks to centralize power in the Federal Government, he seeks in effect to centralize it, not in the Federal Government as a whole, but in the Executive—that is, in himself. I might have added that, if there is to be centralized power, it would be better and safer to centralize it in a carefully balanced government in which the Legislative and Judiciary branches are equally important with the executive.)

It is not necessary to go further into detail.

What I am saying is that Mr. Roosevelt believes in centralized authority—although formerly he did not— and that I think he is wrong in now holding that adherence to our traditional order is going back to "the horse and buggy days."

And so, having answered our first two questions, we come to the third:

"How effective have been Mr. Roosevelt's actions taken to accomplish his purposes, and how effective are his future actions likely to be?"

I should answer this rather difficult question as follows:

1. His actions taken to accomplish the centralization of power in a Federal bureaucracy have been highly effective. He has accomplished a centralization of power such as we have never seen in this country, such as was never contemplated or permitted by the Constitution, and such as undoubtedly will be found in large measure unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

2. His actions taken, by means of the vast centralized powers obtained from a driven and bewildered Congress, in the direction of producing "a more abundant life" have been very largely ineffective.

3. Where these latter actions have been effective—as in the case of relief payments—their effectiveness is very often of an obviously temporary nature. Four and a half billion dollars a year will effectively prevent millions of people from starving, but only so long as you go on spending the money to feed them.

To take another example, the agricultural relief program has been effective in the sense that it has put money in the hands of the farmers—but it has not solved their problem. If the AAA is declared unconstitutional—as it seems likely it will—a new method will have to be devised. And if this does not happen, the "effectiveness" of the AAA is limited by the length of time that its costs can be supported.

But that is not the worst of it.

When you say a thing is effective you really mean two things:

You mean that it works—that is, does what it is supposed to do, and

You mean that it gives you what is wanted without incurring a disproportionate sacrifice.

• • • •

IT IS my considered opinion that most of Mr. Roosevelt's actions which can be considered effective in the first sense are flagrantly ineffective in the second.

Take again the same two examples of relief payments and the AAA.

As to relief—which is undoubtedly the most difficult problem — Mr. Roosevelt was faced with two undeniable facts:

1. Some form of relief payments had to be devised to keep the unemployed from starving.

2. Whatever money was to be spent for this purpose had to come from the people, eventually, in the form of taxes.

This was a problem that existed for months before Mr. Roosevelt took office—a problem that he had ample time to think about before he became President or even President-elect.

Knowing the problem and having thought about it, he took in 1932 a very definite and to my mind correct position.

He condemned budget deficits.

He recognized that no government can spend more than it can raise by taxation without rendering ineffective whatever other actions it may take.

He recognized that "taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labors." (Pittsburgh, October 19, 1932.)

He recognized that relief was primarily a concern of the States, and that the Federal Government should confine itself to aiding the States whenever "the diminishing resources of the States made it impossible for them to carry the burden alone."

The implication of such a program—which was, I think, the right program—was that unemployment could be cured only by a revival of business activity; that the most the Federal Government could do, pending such a revival, was to help the States carry out whatever relief programs the citizens of each of the States might determine, and that it was certainly not the function of the Federal Government to guarantee every employable a job.

That is what Candidate Roosevelt said he believed.

That is not what President Roosevelt says he believes now.

President Roosevelt has forgotten what happens to the people of a country whose government consistently spends more than its income.

President Roosevelt has forgotten that the money he is handing out so generously is money which will have to be paid "in the sweat of the brow of every man who labors."

• • • •

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has come to believe in the omnipotence and omniscience of a central government bureaucracy which will determine for the whole country what it shall eat and drink and do with its leisure time, and which will find jobs for every one that will assure them of "a more abundant life."

I am told that this is "good politics."

I fervently hope that 1936 will show that it is not.

I fervently hope and believe that the American people will realize:

1. That some day they will have to pay in their own sweat for Mr. Roosevelt's generosity—as well as for his extravagance in setting up a huge democracy.

2. That a different relief program, such as that advocated by Mr. Roosevelt in 1932, would have produced the same amount of relief without retarding recovery and without abandoning the fundamental principles of home rule.

3. That there is at least some danger—to put it mildly—in the fact that Mr. Roosevelt has put himself in a position where, in addition to the usual "patronage," he can swing a $4,500,000,000 relief fund over the heads of Congressmen whenever they show any signs of becoming restive under the apparently endless sequence of "must" legislation demanded by the White House.

And now as to the other example, the Roosevelt agricultural program:

The idea behind the AAA when it was established was supposed to be the restoration of the purchasing power of the farmer. Ultimately this was to have been accomplished by "adjustment" of production to consumption through crop control. In the meantime this ultimate objective was to be hastened by paying bounties to agricultural producers, provided they would agree to reduce their production in accordance with plans made at Washington. These bounties were to be financed by "processing taxes" levied upon the consumers of farm products.

Before we proceed to see what happened let us pause for a moment to think this over. The AAA was a plan to "adjust" production to consumption by controlling only production. It is obvious to any one who thinks at all clearly that one can not effectively control the price of something by merely controlling its supply—the control of demand is equally important.

But that is not the main point.

Nor is it the main point that the processing taxes are probably unconstitutional and are certainly the kind of tax on food and clothing against which Mr. Roosevelt specifically committed himself.

• • • •

THE main point emerges clearly as we watch the development of the administration of this program of "adjustment." Originally the act was written to operate only through the voluntary cooperation of the farmer. As time went on we had less and less co-operation and more and more coercion. As time went on we had the Bankhead act, which contains no semblance of voluntary co-operation by the farmer and, as I write this, we have just witnessed the pasage by Congress of certain Administration-sponsored amendments to AAA which remove once and for all any doubt as to where this program is leading.

The Administration refers to these amendments as mere "clarifying amendments." As a matter of fact they are more than that, but I do not object to calling them "clarifying amendments" because they do clarify, beyond any question of doubt, what Mr. Roosevelt is trying to do. Fortunately once more we have President Roosevelt's own words upon which to base our judgment.

When he was making his now famous "horse and buggy" complaint upon the invalidation of the NRA by the Supreme Court, President Roosevelt took particular pains to point out the probable effect of this decision upon the rest of the New Deal. He said that the same reasoning which had caused the court unanimously to hold the NRA unconstitutional would probably likewise cause it to invalidate the whole AAA, and he added, with obvious chagrin, that this would mean a return to "the old policy that every farmer was a lord on his own farm, free to raise whatever and as much of any crop as he pleased."

It is quite possible that I am completely wrong in my interpretation of what the American people and particularly the American farmer want. I am no politician, and Mr. Roosevelt is said to be "the best politician we have ever had in the White House." But it seems to me that to have every farmer "a lord on his own farm, free to raise whatever and as much of any crop as he pleases" is not such a terrible thing at all. In fact it seems to me a pretty good thing—certainly a far better thing than having Messrs. Wallace and Tugwell sitting in Washington and figuring out what and how much every farmer is to raise—certainly a far better thing than having a law which forbids us to grow more than five bushels of potatoes, and which tries to make us into a Nation of spies and informers.

• • • •

WE are a free people and not a race of Russian peasants; with all due respect to Mr. Roosevelt and his bureaucratic experts, I see no reason to suppose that they are the "men almost godlike in their ability to hold the scales of justice with an even hand," whose existence Mr. Roosevelt himself so wisely doubted back in March, 1930.

So, then, I should say that the AAA—our second example—was effective in temporarily raising the farmer's purchasing power, without, however, leaving the farmer one bit better off than he was before, when and if the AAA is invalidated by the Supreme Court.

And I should say that this temporary relief for the farmer was acquired at the expense of all our citizens, without reference to "ability to pay," and at the cost to our farmers of their American birthright of freedom.

So much for the Roosevelt policies that might be called temporarily effective, but whose temporary effectiveness has been purchased at what to me at least would seem too great a cost. In this category I should place most of the so-called recovery measures—the spending program, the NRA, the AAA and all the countless Federal agencies by which Mr. Roosevelt has sought to impose a planned economy upon the Nation.

The New Dealers would answer this statement by raising a cry of "Laissez faire." Anyone who says what I have said—or, in fact, anyone who disagrees with them—is instantly accused of three things: ignorance, self-interest and a desire to do nothing.

The charge of ignorance or self-interest does not trouble me. We are all ignorant and we are all to a certain extent self-interested. The only difference is that some of us do not realize it.

As to the charge of laissez faire, my answer is this:

A do-nothing policy would be less harmful than a policy of muddle-headed meddling, but I do not advocate a do-nothing policy. I advocate a policy for the Federal Government of doing what it is intended to do under the Constitution and of leaving to the States and smaller units of society, down to and including the individual, the functions that properly belong to them—including the functions of making their own mistakes.

I advocate—if I can understand plain English—exactly what Mr. Roosevelt advocated before he moved from the Executive Mansion at Albany to the White House.

'Sweet Adeline'

By

Ralph E. Renaud.

NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—Five men were arrested the other day as the first victims of New York's anti-noise campaign for "boisterously" rolling the bones in a 4 a. m. dice game. It would have been O. K. with the magistrate, apparently, if they had just been quiet about it. But meanwhile the city's famous Barber Shop Derby has been allowed to run untrammeled, with sour notes bursting like bombs all over the metropolis.

It has been an inter-borough contest under the management of the intrepid park department and gentlemen quartetters have been battling throatily in weekly competition for the ultimate trophies of silver shaving mugs. At least, some of them were gentlemen and none were ladies. The Mills Brothers did not enter, having a prior engagement on the radio, but a quartette from the Mills Hotel did. They were not graduated from the Barber's Chair to the Electric Chair but merely thrown out on their ears. At that, there was a good deal of grumbling about the light sentence. Thousands of listeners, fascinated by the cacophany, gathered at these early heats, but most of the contestants escaped.

The main event was pulled off this week in an open-air barber shop set up for the occasion in Central Park Mall and plentifully supplied with copies of the Police Gazette. The contestants were drawn to the scene in the most fashionable equipment—automobile landaus of 1905, light buggies hitched to spanking trotters and a horse-propelled Broadway stagecoach. The winner came from Brooklyn and it is only in Brooklyn that they could have found their costumes—short striped blazers, tight white trousers and collegiate caps like teacups and saucers with brief visors. One quartette even came in bathing suits with knee pants and red, purple, green and yellow stripes.

• • • •

THE victors sang "There is a Tavern in This Town" and "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes," bringing tears to every eye and agony to every ear. It is unlikely that any of them knew that Ben Jonson translated his song from the Greek and that it was sung two thousand years ago at Athens, though possibly not in quite the same surroundings. After their victory they obliged with "Down Mobile," which is said to be a Southern song.

The chief judge of the melody-fest was that well-known balladist, the Honorable Alfred E. Smith, known and admired everywhere for his rendition of the popular ditty, "East Side, West Side, All Around the Town." In fact there were repeated demands from the crowd that he sing it, demands which he resisted with difficulty. Nevertheless he joined obligingly with the other judges, Sigmund Spaeth, the tune detective; Luther G. Steward, of Washington, whose collection of early American music is said to be a sight for sore ears, and Park Commissioner Moses, in a spirited assault on "Sweet Adeline." They may have added nothing to Miss Adeline's widely mentioned sweetness, but they made the welkin ring. Finally, as the saying goes, came silence, like a poultice, to heal the wounds of sound.

Commissioner Moses liked the way he sang "Sweet Adeline," so well that he announced the Barber Shop Derby will hereafter be an annual event. Mayor LaGuardia, head of the Anti-Noise Drive, was present but didn't bat an eye.

• • • •

JIMMY WALKER will have to hurry back if he wants to ride in his old Dusenberg car which cost him (maybe) $22,500. Since our James left these shores, and until recently, it has been in possession of a colored gentleman up in Harlem who did pretty well in the numbers game, or something. But now it has gone back to the dealer and is up for sale again. So anybody with the price can occupy the mayor's seat.

Drinking Song.

("Three cocktails made from fresh fruit juices were recommended by the W. C. T. U. They are a November Chill, the Huckleberry Grin and the Harlemesque. The speakers pointed out that in New England the Blackberry Cup and Rhubarb Punch were also popular." —News item.)

I.

Oh, let the chill nor'wester blow
And gird us round with hills of snow!
What matter if the gales set in?
We'll have a Huckleberry Grin!

Chorus:

A Huckleberry Grin, my lass,
A Huckleberry Grin!
Fill up the bumper or the glass
And scorn the rye and gin!

II.

The winter looms not far away,
We'll keep our moods quite warm and gay;
There's nothing that will fill the bill
As well as a November Chill.

Chorus:

A nice November Chill, my lad
A cool November chill!
It warms the heart, it makes one glad,
And fortifies the will.

III.

When moods grow dark and spirits low
There is a drink to make you glow;
Ah, when you're troubled, what a drink!
It's called the Harlemesque (I think.)

Chorus:

A Harlemesque is what I choose,
A bracing Harlemesque!
It's made from watermelon juice—
A notion quite grotesque!

IV.

In old New England when the folks
Are running out of joy and jokes
They have a drink that cheers 'em up—
It's named the Huckleberry Cup.

Chorus:

A Huckleberry Cup, my man,
(A lovely tasting ink!)
I toast you with this cocktail an'
Then throw it down the sink!

V.

But when I'm gathered with the bunch
I always say, "A Rhubarb Punch;"
I get great cheer from such a cup—
Provided that I pass it up!

Chorus:

Oh, fetch a Rhubarb Punch, please do!
And fetch it speedily!
'Twill make a splendid drink for you—
But not, my dear, for me!

Crop Prospects.

Maryland: The heavy rain during four or five days this week, attended by a tornado in limited areas of three counties, and a flood in Southern St. Marys County, has damaged considerable tobacco.

It is still too early to make an intelligent estimate, but if weather conditions remain favorable from now on the damage will be decidedly less than was sustained during either of the two previous years.

Dorothea Duncan Offers Aid to Mothers on Problem of What to Put in School Lunch Box

By Dorothea Duncan.

It is difficult to tell who gets more discouraged over the school-lunch box, the mother who has to pack it or the child who has to lug it to school and eat its contents five times out of the week for eight or nine months each year.

The school-lunch box, in many cases, has relinquished its place to the school cafeteria, but there are still enough schools not supplied with a lunchroom to make the school-lunch box an important topic of household talk. Then, too, many a woman who has to count her pennies knows that by using food she has in the house for the children's lunch rather than handing out 15 or 20 cents for each child daily is a saving that counts up at the end of the week.

BILLY WHEELER, of 125 Sixth street southeast, carries a lunch box that is light enough for convenience, and large enough to hold a luncheon that will satisfy a healthy boy's appetite.

Monotony is the greatest fault of the usual school lunch. The same type of sandwich today, tomorrow and the next day has killed the fun of eating a picnic lunch every day for many a child, for after all the school lunch is constructed along the lines of a picnic meal. If you can create an element of surprise in the contents of the school-lunch box two or three times a week you can feel certain that your child will eat every scrap of his lunch and also be the envy of every other youngster in the class.

Box Should Be Light.

Try to select a lunch box that is sturdy but light and easily carried. You will find a light-weight tin box most satisfactory because it can be washed, scalded and aired daily. You will find a selection of attractive boxes, and many of them are made with vacuum bottle which fits into the box. You will find this bottle an excellent accessory for carrying hot soup, cocoa or milk. Select a box that has some circulation of air, otherwise there will be a mingling of food odors which will result in an unpleasant flavor to all foods.

Separate wrapping in waxed paper of each piece of food not in a container will insure an attractive appearance of the lunch box. The sandwiches and foods to be eaten first should be placed on top, if possible, so the dessert need not be disturbed until it is time to eat it.

The use of a vacuum bottle for hot soups, milk and cocoa has already been suggested. A small glass jar, with a screw cap, however, can also be used for carrying stewed fruits or a small minced salad. A salad cut in small pieces is suggested because it is easier to pack attractively and can be eaten from the container with a spoon or fork.

Vary the Sandwich.

Sandwiches form a main part of the school lunch. These can be varied in numerous ways by using a variety of wholesome breads. Nut bread, whole wheat, rye, brown, raisin, cold bran or whole wheat muffins are some of the ones that will appeal to a child.

Try to use sandwich fillings that will not soak into the bread and become soggy. Spreading the bread out well to the crust with a thin coating of butter will keep the sandwich filling from soaking into the bread for a few hours.

Leftover bits of meat can be ground with the fine blade of the food chopper, mixed with a bit of salad dressing, chopped pickle or celery, red pimento or olives to make a delectable filling. Cheese, eggs, nuts, dried fruits or vegetables can also be put through the food chopper, mixed with a blending mayonnaise and used for a sandwich spread. Finely chopped lettuce, celery, watercress or other greens will make a neater sandwich than pieces of the whole leaf.

Use Waxed Paper.

Juicy vegetables, especially tomatoes, may be washed and sliced and wrapped in waxed paper to be eaten with plain bread and butter sandwiches, as they are too watery to make a sandwich that must stand before eating.

The addition of cream or salad dressing to compact filling, such as peanut butter or cream cheese, will make them spread more easily and evenly and add character to the sandwich.

Deviled eggs, pickles, olives, celery hearts, or carrot sticks will add variety to a sandwich lunch. These should be wrapped separately in heavy waxed paper.

Dried or fresh fruit, cookies or plain cake are the most easily packed of all desserts. However, a bit of pudding or custard can be carried in a wide-necked, screw-top jar.

Dorothea Duncan's latest bulletin for Post readers suggests unusual, inexpensive and nourishing sandwich fillings. A request, accompanied by a stamp, sent to Dorothea Duncan, in care of The Washington Post, will bring it to you promptly.

Apple Catsup Is A Recipe Winner

Following is a recipe for apple catsup, which won for Mrs. Catherine Hessler, 218 S street northeast, a prize in The Post apple contest.

12 sour apples
2 cups vinegar
2 onions, grated
1 cup sugar
1 tablespoon salt
2 tablespoons cinnamon
1 teaspoon mustard
1 teaspoon cloves

Pare and quarter apples. Add water enough to cover and simmer until soft, and water is nearly evaporated. Rub through a sieve and measure pulp. To each quart of pulp add quantities of ingredients as specified above. Bring to a boil and let simmer one hour. Pour into clean, hot jars and seal at once.

Onions Are Good Dipped in Milk And Then Flour

French fried onions need not disappear from the menu just because their excellent accompaniment—steak—has gone beyond the price allowed by the moderate budget. A fluffy omelet or a cheese souffle served with a dish of crisp, fried onions is certainly a dish worth honorable mention.

Those who like the crunchy quality of a French fried onion, but at the same time dislike a pronounced flavor of the vegetable will appreciate the results obtained by cooking the onions in the following manner. Cut medium onions into narrow rings, remove the brown skin from each ring and unroll each ring into separate circles. Soak the onion circles in milk for a few minutes. Drain the onions and coat them with flour. Lower the onions into deep fat (390 degrees F.) in a wire basket and cook for one minute or until delicately browned. Remove to brown paper to drain, sprinkle lightly with salt and serve at once.

Those who prefer the flavor of onions, but like them soft rather than crisp will like this onion sauce served between the layers of an excellent omelet.

Onion Sauce.

2 tablespoons butter
¼ cup water
¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup onions, finely chopped
1 teaspoon flour

Favorite Omelet.

Melt butter, add onions and water, and cook until onions are golden brown. Add flour and seasonings and cook five minutes longer, stirring well. Prepare omelet. Turn out on platter. Place onion mixture between folded layers. Serve at once. Sauce makes enough for an omelet prepared to serve six persons.

Here is another dish that will satisfy that craving for steak and onions, but it is far less expensive.

Broiled Hamburg Steak on Onion Rings.

1 pound finely chopped, lean, raw beef
¼ cup ground suet
1 cup soft, fine bread crumbs
7 strips bacon
7 slices Spanish onion (½ inch thick
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
3 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons onion juice
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 tablespoon water

Lay onions in buttered, shallow baking dish. Pour over 2 tablespoons melted butter, sprinkle with salt and pepper, cover closely, bake until tender (about 30 minutes) in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.). Cook parsley in rest of butter and add to beef, suet, crumbs and seasonings. Mold into 7 flat cakes and wrap each with a slice of bacon. Place each cake on an onion slice in baking dish and cook in broiling oven, 5 minutes on each side. Baste twice.

New Rubbers Protect Fruits From Spoiling

Jars used for preserved or canned fruit should be first sterilized and filled while hot. A long pair of firm tongs will simplify the difficult task of removing hot jars from scalding water.

Wash the jars thoroughly and fill them with cold water. Set the jars in a kettle on a trivet, and surround them with cold water. Heat the water gradually to the boiling point, remove the jars from the water bath and fill while hot. The jar covers should be allowed to remain in a hot water bath for five minutes. Rubbers also should be immersed in hot water but not allowed to remain in the water. New rubbers should be used each season, and care must be taken that rims of covers are not bent, as jars cannot then be hermetically sealed.

Many Factors Enter Into Making of Coffee

Coffee, especially after it has been ground, loses its strength and consequently its flavor, and for this reason should be stored in a closely covered jar or container. Unless coffee is used frequently it should be purchased in very small amounts.

When coffee has lost its flavor from exposure to the air, it can be improved by heating the dry coffee in a frying pan, taking care not to let it burn. The flavor, however, will never be as good as when the coffee is freshly roasted and ground.

Prize-Winning Recipes

Chantilly Apple Relish.

Pare and slice tart apples and cook until tender in as little water as possible. Press through a sieve or put through a ricer, and to each cup of applesauce add 2 tablespoons powdered sugar. Chill and when ready to serve, mix with one cup whipped cream and 1-3 cup horseradish (more may be added, depending upon strength). Serve cold as an accompaniment to a roast fowl or ham. It is also particularly good with roast duck.

MRS. PAULINE THORNHILL.
Seat Pleasant, Md.

William Tell Ham and Apples.

Select a two-pound slice of ham, remove most of the fat. Put fat through a food chopper or mince fine. Place the slice of ham in a baking dish, sprinkle generously with brown sugar. Spread some of the minced fat over the sugar, then cover thick with apples which have been cored and halved horizontally. Do not peel. Pour over the apples 1-3 cup dark corn sirup, and dot with the remaining fat. Pour a small amount of hot water around it and bake in a moderate oven 1 hour. Delicious hot or cold.

Apple Desserts In Post Contest Tempt Appetite

Readers who are interested in trying out new recipes will find excellent material in the following apple desserts which have been selected as prize winners in The Post contest for apple recipes, results of which were announced Tuesday.

Pommes Meringues.
(Apple Meingue).

4 to 5 apples.
1 tablespoon grated orange rind
1½ cups granulated sugar
2 tablespoons orange juice
1 cup boiling water
3 egg whites
½ teaspoon almond extract

Pare, quarter and core apples, cutting each quarter into thirds. There should be 1 quart after slicing. Place in a bowl of water containing 1 teaspoon vinegar. Put 1 cup of the sugar and the water into a skillet and stir over a low heat until the sugar is dissolved. Add the orange rind and juice and boil for five minutes. Drain apples, and cook half of them at a time in this sirup until they become transparent. Arrange in a shallow baking dish and pour any remaining sirup over them. Beat the egg whites stiff but not dry, add one-half cup of the sugar gradually, beating meanwhile, and then add the extract. Pile on the apples and bake in a slow oven (300 degrees F.) about 30 minutes. Chill and serve. Instead of orange juice and rind, 2 or 3 teaspoons of port wine flavoring may be used. Serve in small portions, for this is a rich dessert. Serves 6.

MRS. B. D. RUFFIN.
1645 Connecticut avenue.

Colorado Baked Apples With Honey.

Pare and core six large apples, place them in a baking dish and in the center of each drop three teaspoons strained honey, one teaspoon orange juice, one whole clove, one walnut meat and one-quarter teaspoon butter. Bake until apples are translucent, or about 30 minutes, at 400 degrees F. Serve each apple, hot or cold, as you prefer, with a swirl of slightly sweetened whipped cream to which ginger and cinnamon have been added before beating, one-quarter teaspoon of each spice to one cup of heavy cream.

MRS. JOHN B. PORTER.
Leonardtown, Md.

Apple-Oatmeal Crinkle.

Mix four cups of sliced apples with two tablespoons of flour and one cup of sugar. Place in a well-greased deep dish. Over this pour a mixture of the following ingredients.

½ cup brown sugar
½ cup rolled oats
½ cup flour
½ cup melted butter

Bake 45 minutes in a moderate oven. Serve cold or hot with cream, whipped cream or ice cream.

MRS. FRANCES MILLS.
3605 Twenty-fourth street northeast.

To Crack Ice.

Cracking ice by pounding it in a towel breaks the threads and makes the towel wear out more quickly. A strong muslin bag and a wooden hammer can be purchased for a quarter or less and is a convenience as well as an economy.

The Left-Over Yolk.

The egg yolk which is left over from a frosting that calls only for the white of an egg can be put to good use by beating it up in the children's luncheon milk. If it tastes too "eggy," a few grains of nutmeg will improve the flavor.

The goodies you bake will taste better made with

Assorted Bags Are Displayed At Special Sale

By Ruth Anne Davis.

BOYS AND GIRLS who are going away to boarding school, college students who are campus bound, attention! Have you the right kind of luggage? When your new roommate sees your suitcase will he know immediately that you're a person of taste, or will it definitely prejudice him or her against your sterling qualities?

Be prepared! Visit an F street store which has the grandest assortment of luggage we've seen in a long time, and fit yourself out from A to Z. The most amazing feature about this baggage is its price. Since the store is running a special sale in these articles, the values are something one sees once in a lifetime.

To-wit: a stunning Gladstone bag is selling for only $4.79. Commodious without being cumbersome, it is beautifully finished both inside and out. A special partition keeps shirts from rumpling and there is another partition for papers.

Some grand overnight cases come in brown or black, lined with silk, and containing two bottles, a comb and a toothbrush. Just the thing for that week-end trip to the Big Game.

Then, there's a light, roomy object called a "pullman wardrobe," a sort of hybrid somewhere between a trunk and a large suitcase. It has all the advantages of a trunk, without being heavy or bulky. Special racks hold one's frocks to keep them from rumpling, and there are drawers for lingerie as well. The outside is as smart as the inside is practical. It's a heavy beige canvas, striped in brown, and the whole thing costs from $9 up.

Rugs for $1 Each.

HERE'S SOME NEWS which should make bargain hounds prick up their ears and reach for their pocketbooks in goodly haste. A canny buyer in a downtown store has recently stocked some special values in small rugs which sell for only $1 apiece. These carpets are made of remains of rolls used for special order purposes, so their quality is considerably better than their price would indicate. They come in almost any color scheme, suitable to the most complicated color arrangement to be found in any room. Some are brown, some are blue, and others have flowered patterns with a band in plain color.

Perfume With Haunting Aroma.

THE OTHER DAY we were permitted to sample some of the most exciting perfume we have whiffed for ages. Its fragrance is impossible to describe, for its peculiar haunting odor is beyond the power of mere words to portray. And this perfume is as lasting as it is delectable. One application should suffice for the entire day or evening. Encased in a handsome box, it sells for 50 cents a bottle, or 75 cents the dram size. Now that cooler nights are with us again, it's time to replace the lighter eau-de-colognes with the richer, heavier perfumes.

Artificial Fingernails.

IF YOU'RE a weak sister afflicted with the nasty habit of fingernail biting, we advise you, of course, to stop it immediately, as nothing is more ruinous to the appearance than gnawed and stubby nails. But in the meantime, while you're waiting for them to grow, hide those unsightly fingertips under some artificial nails. These can be attached with no trouble at all and are absolutely guaranteed not to come dropping off. No tiresome fussing with lengthy preparations ahead of time with these nails, because they slip on and off almost as easily as a glove. They are made so that one can apply the perfect half moon which is a characteristic of well cared for hands, and they can be filed as short as desired. The price is only $1 for a generous package. Say good-by to fingernail consciousness with a set of these.

All Her Efforts to Obtain Introduction to Well-Known Local Entertainer Having Failed, 19-Year-Old Girls Writes This Column as Last Resort.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: When you read this letter you will probably think I'm crazy—which I am, I guess. For about a year now I've been wanting to meet (name omitted) who leads the (name omitted) theater orchestra. Since January I've been going to this theater every week and sitting in the front row, just to see him. I do want to meet him so. But everybody I know objects. I know of a lot of persons who know him and I know one man who knows him personally. But nbody will introduce me.

* * * *

Here are some of the objections: That I'm too young, being 19; that my dad (my mother is dead) would probably raise heck and my friends don't want to get into trouble. Also, they say I might not like him after all, which is for me to decide. And I've promised not to tell if they did give me an introduction. Am I not old enough to do what I wish once in a while, and meet whomever I like?

* * * *

Coming back to the age question, all my friends except one are older than I am. My best friend is 26, almost 27, and another is 29. Please, please, Miss Haworth, can't you tell me how to meet him? I don't want to do it in any unconventional way, but I'm getting so desperate that I'm almost ready to try it, though. But before attempting anything like that I'm turning to you as a last resort. Oh, do something about it, please. Maybe you'd have some way of introducing me. You're so helpful to others I though perhaps you could help me. Thank you for any help you can give me. Sincerely.

MISS E. G.

Meeting Is Arranged.

DEAR MISS E. G.: A perfectly proper meeting with the young man has been arranged. As you may know, his orchestra broadcasts from Station WRC, on the twelfth floor of the National Press Building, each Tuesday evening at 10 o'clock. An informal reception follows the broadcast, to which between 10 and 15 persons are admitted by invitation of the orchestra leader, who gives them special courtesy cards.

* * * *

When he learned of your longstanding wish to meet him this man, with extraordinarily winning courtesy and understanding, promptly asked me to invite you and your father, or other relative, as chaperone, to his next broadcast and reception. I gave him your name and he said tickets would be left for you at the door. After the broadcast you may approach him and introduce yourself and your chaperone and thank him for a pleasant evening. There will be no need for self-consciousness so far as the other guests are concerned, since none but your host will know of the circumstances leading up to the meeting.

* * * *

He made it quite definite, however, that you are to visit the station only on condition that you obtain your father's permission to do so, and that you come accompanied either by your father, an aunt, a sister-in-law or other relative—and not by some unrelated young friend. The broadcast begins at 10 p. m., and guests must be seated by 9:45 p. m.

* * * *

You realize, of course, that persons who occupy the spotlight which this young man occupies, and whose professional success depends so greatly upon public approval, must observe the social proprieties with all the diligence of a cloistered subdebutnate if they are to avoid the breath of damaging scandal.. So it follows that any attempts made to meet this young man in an unconventional manner would meet with no success whatsoever. He would give no more encouragement to such procedure than would your father, or your mother, if she were living.

* * * *

And, since he has paved the way with such kindly and appreciative courtesy, for you to meet him in an open and honorable manner, I think you must match his courtesy by subscribing to the conditions he has laid down. Don't cheapen yourself, nor dishonor his hospitality, by deceiving either your father or your host.

Plant Parasite Causes Serious Ear Infections

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

PLANT fungus infections on the mucous surfaces of the mouth, nose and throat occur much more frequently than is generally supposed. Sometimes these growths burrow deeply into the tissues and cause systemic symptoms of considerable severity. Until recently many of these conditions were entirely unrecognized. They were thought to be tropical or semi-tropical diseases and to exist only in areas where great heat allowed fungi to propagate rather rapidly.

Recent investigations have shown that plant fungi are not strangers to the external ear canal. They are planted in the area by dust and by soiled fingers. Ringworm infections, a form of fungus, are not uncommon. Whenever the irritation caused by the growing plants becomes great enough, pus-producing bacteria usually appear to complicate the situation.

Many disorders of the hearing can, on careful examination, be traced directly to the growth of these tiny plant parasites in the skin of the canal and even on the eardrum itself. The commonest symptoms are itching and the feeling that there is something plugging the canal. There may be loss of acuteness of hearing, and often pain when bacteria add their inflammatory activities.

Detection of plant parasites depends upon careful microscopic examination of material obtained from the ear. It should be carefully separated with fine needles and examined under a microscope. The infection is not serious if it can be discovered early and treated properly. If, however, the parasite gains entrance to deeper tissues, such as the lungs, and is allowed to multiply there undisturbed, serious systemic symptoms may ensue.

Iodine is the one drug which these plants cannot abide. Taken internally, or used in solution in the mouth, or applied directly to the skin lesions, its employment is usually followed by prompt destruction of the fungi and cessation of infection. In the external ear many antiseptics, such as copper sulphate, an alcoholic solution of some of the aniline dyes, resorcinol, and salicylic acid have been used.

Vachel Lindsay's Work Carried on by Widow

Post Staff Photo.

MRS. VACHEL LINDSAY,

widow of the widely known poet, who will teach in Washington this year at the King-Smith School, is carrying on her husband's wish to make poetry a community joy.

Advocate of Poetry for the Masses Plans to Teach Appreciation Along With Technique and Craftsmanship.

By Dudley Harmon.

TO VACHEL LINDSAY, late poet whose "Congo" and other works brought him world-wide fame, poetry was not an art to be enjoyed by only a chosen few, but a source of joy for the community at large. During his lifetime he traveled extensively through the country reading his poems aloud to young and old, rich and poor, in an effort to awaken in them an enduring appreciation of the meaning of poetry.

Vachel Lindsay is dead, but his mission lives on after him in the person of his young widow, Elizabeth Conner Lindsay, who has come to Washington to teach in the King-Smith School of fine and applied arts. Mrs. Lindsay believes as her husband did that verse carries a message for everybody, and that it is not reserved for an artistic few. In her courses, she plans to instill in her pupils an ever-deepening appreciation of good poetry along with lessons in technique and craftsmanship.

Poet in Her Own Right.

Mrs. Lindsay, a poet in her own right, has published her work in leading magazines and periodicals. However, while her famous husband lived, she subordinated her work to his interests, and during their life together was his secretary and manager, and accompanied him on his reading tours throughout the country. Thus she avoided the pitfalls which are commonly supposed to arise when two exceptionally talented people unite their lives.

Her influence made itself felt in the actual creation of her husband's poems, as well.

"Like most poets," Mrs. Lindsay said, "my husband revised his work often as much as 15 or 20 times before he was satisfied. But unlike most poets, he would read it aloud while in the making to me or to a group of friends, and then ask for our opinion. If we did not like a particular word, we would say so, and he would substitute something else in its place, often a word which we ourselves had suggested."

Women Achieve Distinction.

Women poets are coming into their own at last, according to Mrs. Lindsay. Never before, she said, have there been so great a number of poets to achieve distinction as in the twentieth century. As proof, she cited Amy Lowell, Emily Dickinson, Sara Teasdale and Edna St. Vincent Millay among others.

"The great women poets, however," Mrs. Lindsay continued, "can never approach the work of the really distinguished men poets. For example, women have never excelled in such forms as the epic, the form in which our greatest masterpieces, such as Dante's Inferno and Milton's Paradise Lost, are written.

"It is in the lyric form that women find their happiest medium of expression. Since a woman's life centers about her emotions, it is only natural that she would write her best poetry when she writes of love and kindred feelings."

Taught in High School.

After graduation from Mills College, in California, Mrs. Lindsay taught in the high schools in the Middle West from which she was graduated. While there, she renewed her acquaintance with Vachel Lindsay, whom she had met while a college student. Three months later they were married. She has two children aged 7 and 9.

Mrs. Lindsay is reserving judgment as to whether or not her children have poetic talents.

"They occasionally write poems," she said, "but then most children pass through such a stage at one time or another in their development."

Book That Tells Ways to Spend Leisure Hailed

The following article is one of a series on home activities for children appearing Tuesdays and Saturdays on the woman's page. Mrs. Bartlett, the author, is active in progressive education circles.

By Lenore K. Bartlett.

THE PARENT-TEACHER Association of Lincoln School, New York, has performed a real service for the people of New York City. In a book called "Spend Your Time," it has listed the many resources available for the use of leisure time.

Mrs. Bartlett.

Art, drama, the dance, music, libraries, science, history, civic institutions, commerce, play grounds and parks, stamps, photography, etc., each has a comprehensive listing. Under each classification is information on schools, exhibits, publications, libraries and every other conceivable datum so arranged that every assistance to further study is at hand.

Problem Held Serious.

Claire Reis, chairman of the editorial board of the Parent-Teacher Association, in the foreword, says, "The problem of utilizing an increasing amount of leisure in a satisfactory manner has become a matter of grave importance. Modern power and technology directed by the new economic theory and practice as developed in the national industrial act may continue to shorten the proportion of a man's time to be spent upon his livelihood and may lengthen that portion which he spends in enjoying the fruits of his labor. Cultural and recreational pursuits therefore take on an added significance both for the school and for the individual."

Because the child of today is the adult of tomorrow we as parents must prepare our children to use intelligently this increasing leisure portion of time. Life is becoming more socialized and our children must begin to learn not only how to get along in a group but also how to use intelligently the facilities at his disposal which will assist him in this new kind of recreation. New York City has exceptional opportunities for such work and Washington is far above the average of the rest of the country in these facilities. Pending the time when every city will not only have the facilities but a directory showing just what there is and where to find it, parents must realize their responsibility to their children and help to provide for them in the home both the stimulus and the materials which will make experimenters and seekers after knowledge out of the next generation.

For help in providing your children a more interesting home life or in meeting other of their problems write Mrs. Bartlett in care of The Post.

Women Should Take Chances To Benefit Their Own Careers And Push Reform Movements

By Malvina Lindsay.

DR. ALFRED ADLER, father of the "inferiority complex," says women suffer more from that psychic affliction than do men. And, the doctor adds, the more cultured and educated the woman, the more she feels her supposed inferiority.

* * * *

If this be true, it is the world's great loss because the contributions of superior women were never so badly needed as today. But in order to make these contributions women must first have faith in themselves.

* * * *

Dr. Adler hopefully assures them that their feelings of inferiority has no biological foundation. He terms it a "fictitious invention of the male sex."

Whether or not men promote this feeling in women, there is no doubt that they do nothing to help women overcome it. The average woman spends her life being a cheer leader for some man—or men. But she seldom ever finds a rooter for herself. However grandly husbands, brothers or fathers may hand over fur coats or electric refrigerators, they are seldom lavish with psychic encouragement to their women folk.

PERHAPS this is not the men's fault so much as that of a social system that assigns to women the task of keeping the male ego inflated. In social life women must direct their mentality and their energy to entertaining men, drawing them out, listening to their stories, laughing at their jokes, subtly admiring their prowess. In family life, the wife's first duty is to keep her husband bucked up. The big strong man must be sent forth to battle each morning feeling like Napoleon. At night he must be welcomed as a conquering hero and reinforced for the next day's victories over his boss or his stenographer.

However, the average woman, even though she may come from an equally arduous day's work in office or home, finds no one ready to hang breathlessly on her recital of the day's events or to tell her how good she is. And if she is engaged in creative work she seldom, if ever, has a zealous shadow to guard the door, attend to the gas bills and make her believe her next book, painting or composition will be a masterpiece. Small wonder there are so few women geniuses!

* * * *

That women accomplish as much as they do without having cheer leaders is proof of their strength, also of their possibilities. And they might as well face the fact that they will have to go on feeding the flame of their own self-confidence. However, knowing that they have to do this is half of the battle.

THE FRANK recognition that they must constantly down such demon thoughts as "who am I to attempt this?" or "what will people say?" will enable women to express themselves more freely both as individuals and as citizens. It will enable them to carry out their little personal yearnings—whether these be taking up dancing at 60 or appearing on bicycles in shorts—as well as to essay big undertakings—whether these be cleaning up the alleys of their neighborhoods or challenging Hitlerism.

* * * *

It has been said that women fail of accomplishment more than men because they are not such good losers, because they are afraid to take chances. However, it is more likely that men are not such good losers as they are egotists. They take chances because they have supreme faith in themselves, because they believe that even if they lose they will be strong enough to survive and take other chances. That is the kind of faith women need and the kind they may be able to cultivate through scientific effort.

* * * *

Women today need to step out audaciously and take chances on bettering not only themselves but their environment. They need to take the chance that crime may be decreased, slums cleared, education extended, politics made an honorable and intelligent pursuit, jobs assured for all who can work and world peace made a realitq. And in this connection they need to look upon the "who am I?" feeling not as becoming modesty but as a neurocism to be ruthlessly uprooted.

Authority on Speech Blames Defects on Smug Lowbrow-ism

A FORM of smug lowbrowism is largely responsible for the speech defects heard in the United States, Miss Juliet Barker, authority on speech personality, believes.

The average American, particularly the Middle Westerner, shies away from softening harsh r's and broadening a's when they should be broadened merely because he—or she—fears to be thought affected, Miss Barker pointed out.

In an article on "What's Wrong With Middle Western Speech?" in the current issue of Correct Speech, Miss Barker said the rolled or harsh "r's" sound is among the most unpleasant features of American conversation. She points out that Middle Westerners especially, in pronouncing such words as "farm" emphasize the "r" and slight the "a." She advises them in such word as "storm," "heart," "ear," "mother," "board," etc. to dwell on the vowel sounds and take the r's with a "soft glide.."

Another speech hurdle at which Middle Westerners shy, according to Miss Barker, is broad "a" in words such as "aunt" and "laugh." She said that persons who insist on proving their lack of affectation by pronouncing these words with the short "a" are really more affected than those who use the correct pronunciation.

Americans, she said, also need to install some long "u" sounds in words such as "duke," "tune" "duet" and "tulip" and get the right "o" sound in words like "God," "dog," "office" and "Boston."

Miss Barker deplored the prejudice that has developed against nice distinctions of speech, especially the feeling that one who speaks correctly is no longer a good fellow but has become a prig and a cad. She pointed out that persons taking such as attitude should wake up to the fact that correct speech is coming into general use rapidly, partly as a result of the radio and the talkies, and that within a short time the person who glories in incorrect and so-called "plain speech" will be ridiculed.

Tailored Lounging Robes in Vogue

Reds and All Shades of Blue and Green to Be Worn.

By Amos Parrish.

NEW YORK, Sept. 13. — For those lazy hours when she just relaxes and takes life easy, the fashion-knowing woman will choose lounging wear with lines trim and tailored as her autumn street things . . . or her new roadster.

A winner in fashion's eyes is the tailored flannel robe. Often with piping of a contrasting color. Neatly fitted, these robes, almost ankle length, snugged round the waist, and often with high and cozy necklines.

Pockets are a definite feature taken from fall daytime clothes, carrying out the young, boyish feeling. Glance at the two figures sketched . . . two patch pockets on both of them. And this is no exception, but rather the rule!

Two-piece lounging pajamas are immensely popular. They're easy to slip into, and good looking in a casual, tailored way. Some are of heavy silk, many of flannel, and many of corduroy, which takes deep, brilliant dyes!

There's a wide range of colors for these lounging hours! There are reds bright as October apples —and all shades of blue and green. Quantities of navy, too (often piped with a contrasting color, or white). Dusty pink, deep rose, Renaissance bright brown, Renaissance light red, and a grand new toast color are all in the color picture.

Two-Piece Pajamas Are Popular; Color Range Is Wide.

Daring Ideas Used In the Sun Room

Floors Are Being Finished in Light Colors.

Many of the country's leading decorators are following a new note in decorating sun rooms. One wall is frequently painted a different tone from the other three.

Perhaps by following this unique idea and obtaining a modernization loan under the Federal Housing Administration's plan, an old and dull sun parlor may be brought up to date. Floors are being finished in light colors rather than the conventional dark shades which have been used for so many years.

Another new plan is to finish the walls in an oyster white and the woodwork in a brilliant shade, such as lacquer red, electric blue or spring green. The sun room is one place in the house where daring ideas may be carried out in a decorating scheme.

A coat of paint will often make "friends" of diversified pieces of furniture which so frequently find their way to this part of the house.

Nice Seeks to End Relief Muddle, Asks Hopkins for Parley

To Demand Why U. S. Cut Outlays

Executive Won't Promise Special Session on Aid Problems.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Sept. 13.—Gov. Harry W. Nice stepped into Maryland's muddled relief situation today, called State leaders together for a conference with Federal authorities and declined to promise that an immediate special session of the Legislature would be called to consider relief matters.

After conferring with Harry Greenstein, State relief administrator, Nice asked Harry Hopkins, Federal relief head, to receive a Maryland delegation next week. He also notified Maryland's Senators and State Legislature leaders to be prepared to attend this conference with him.

The question of a special session for relief action was brought up by a delegation of the People's Unemployment League, which called on the Governor to ask him to aid in adding to reduced relief allowances. Nice declared that he would not promise to call such a session until legislative leaders assured him that some helpful action would be taken.

Federal Cuts Brought Crisis.

The present crisis originated two weeks ago when Federal authorities cut the allotment of funds to the State by about $75,000. This necessitated a reduction of 15 per cent in the relief allownaces to Baltimore unemployed. County jobless also were cut.

Aubrey Williams, assistant to Hopkins, declared yesterday that Maryland had not carried its share of the relief burden and intimated that State leaders were not interested in caring for the jobless. He suggested that Maryland utilize its credit and borrow for their support.

Those who were asked to be ready to accompany the Governor to Washington were Lansdale G. Sasscer, president of the State Senate; Emanuel Gorfine, speaker of the House; Senator J. Allan Coad, chairman of the finance committee; Kent R. Mullikan, chairman of the House ways and means committee, and United States Senators Millard E. Tydings and George L. Radcliffe.

Cuts Not Explained, He Says.

In announcing the request for a conference Nice said that no official explanation had been made why the cut in relief fund was necessary.

During the recent session of the Legislature, he said, Federal authorities agreed to accept $5,000,000 per year from the State and provide the rest necessary to care for the unemployed. The State, he declared, is providing its share, but the Federal Government has consistently reduced the amount requested by Greenstein.

Referring to the intention in Washington to stop all direct relief on November 1, Nice said it would apparently be impossible to transfer all Maryland's unemployed to Works Progress jobs by that time. He continued:

"If, therefore, Washington carries out its announced intention we will be facing a crisis of a major order. The announcement made in Washington already caused a great deal of anxiety and insecurity for the thousands of individuals now on relief, and I feel, in justice to them, that it is important that we relieve their concern at the earliest possible moment.

U. S. Must Go On, Asserts.

"I feel very strongly that Federal relief funds must be continued in Maryland until the works program has attained its objective, and that relief appropriations should be reduced only on the basis of the actual transfer of individuals from relief to employment."

The delegation asked that no reliance be placed on the ability of the WPA to take persons off relief rolls, and that the special session be called immediately. They also asked that income and other taxes be imposed to raise relief funds, that the standards of relief be raised and that unemployed be given representation on the county boards of welfare.

Regarding the special session, Nice told the delegation that there was already a disposition among some legislators to take the burden of relief off the State and leave it to the local political units. A special session at this time might give this feeling a chance to appear as law, he said.

Farm Hand Charged With Theft of Horse

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., Sept. 13.—Tom Darr, of Warren County, has been charged with the theft of J. W. Conner's horse, which was the object of a search by officers of two counties for three days. The horse, valued at $200, was found on the farm of Luther Lockard, in the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains in Warren County.

Darr, who had been employed by Conner, left Saturday night with a promise to come back to work the following Monday, but failed to return. Darr is alleged to have attempted to sell the animal to Lockard.

Move Launched To Save State's Weather Units

Baltimore Groups Urge Retention of 60 Stations, Denied Funds.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Sept. 13.—Sixty cooperative weather stations in all sections of Maryland are threatened with curtailment because the last General Assembly failed to appropriate $2,800, and a movement has been launched by the Baltimore Association of Commerce and the Engineering Club of Baltimore to obtain the necessary funds to carry on what is considered an essential service for both industry and the public.

The board of public works and Gov. Harry W. Nice have been asked to save the service, which has been in existence in Maryland for 40 years. Failure to make the appropriation, these organizations contend, will decrease the effectiveness of the service and adversely affect many and varied interests in nearly all counties.

In its letter to the board of public works, the Engineering Club stated that the appropriation expires September 30, and that the State apparently failed to make the appropriation because of the thought that there may be a duplication of State and Federal service. After a careful investigation, it was found by the club that the State appropriation is used only to extend activities of the National Weather Bureau and not to duplicate them, and that any curtailment will result in the omission of services.

Unless the appropriation is made available immediately, the Engineering Club states that adequate inspection of cooperative precipitation and temperature stations can not be maintained.

The observers at these cooperative stations are unpaid volunteer meteorologists. These records, the letter stated, prove of inestimable value for studies in connection with engineering problems, especially those affecting water supply. The Federal Government makes no provision for this inspection and it is therefore held to be a State problem.

Data obtained by these observers are placed in booklet form and used extensively in public schools.

The following organizations were cited as benefiting from the service: Shipping interests, State roads, farmers, schools, newspapers, fruit growers, department stores, contractors, street railways, electric and telephone companies, water services, street cleaning departments, travelers and aviation interests.

The 60 observers keep a daily record of high and low temperatures, precipitation, snowfall and at the end of each month and year compile the records which are sent to the Baltimore headquarters.

Money Ready For Maryland WPA Projects

$59,950 Made Available to Start Program Immediately.

Work Is Due to Begin in Glen Burnie, Baltimore and Cumberland.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Sept. 13.—The mechanics of setting up Works Progress Administration projects was outlined today by Francis H. Dryden, Maryland WPA head, as he was notified that the first actual cash for the program was ready.

Dryden was informed by wire that Comptroller General McCarl had countersigned a warrant for $59,950. The telegram did not say which projects this was to be spent on. However, the amount named was the total cost of the first four projects approved by the President on August 29.

Cumberland, improvement of streets and extension of water main; Glen Burnie, sidewalks; Baltimore City, Fifth Regiment Armory.

Money Is Ready.

Actual starting of the work will depend on the sponsors of the projects. Dryden has notified them that the money has been placed to his credit in the Federal Treasury, and that work can begin as soon as they are ready. He has not yet heard when the first men will be hired.

The projects will be started under supervision of WPA officials. A WPA engineer will go to the site and ask for the local relief authorities to instruct the necessary number of men to report to him. Foremen provided by the sponsor will also report to the WPA man. The work will then start, and will be carried out under the supervision of the local foremen, with inspections by the WPA.

Pay Roll Arranged.

Pay rolls for the work will be made up at the scene and sent to Dryden. He will check them to make sure they conform to the agreement under which the money was provided, and then approve them.

After approval, Federal checks will be made out by a disbursing office, which has been set up here, and mailed to the workmen. Later, branch disbursing offices may be set up at the sites of larger jobs. Wage payments will be made every two weeks.

WARREN E. TYDINGS.

Tydings Quits As Organizer Of Democrats

Declares Movement Is Not 'Salable' to Youths in the Colleges.

Charging the Young Democratic Club of Maryland is "not salable" to young people of the State, Warren E. Tydings, former University of Maryland student body president, yesterday resigned as college organization work director.

Tydings is the second official to resign from the club which, in the past year, has exerted influence in Maryland for the re-election of President Roosevelt. Carl Monses resigned recently as Eastern Shore vice president.

In a letter to Lawrence B. Fenneman, of Baltimore, the president, Tydings said the organization was being run by a leader who cared more for his "personal ambitions" than he did for the club. Dated from Davidsonville, Md., the letter read in part:

"Since accepting the position several months ago, I have found it to be unfortunately true the Young Democratic Club of Maryland is not salable to young people of Maryland. I particularly speak in the interest of those individuals residing outside of Baltimore City, the same opinion being expressed by those who know Baltimore City."

"At the time of the merger of the Young Independent Democrats of Maryland and the Young People's Democratic League, which, as you know, resulted in the formation of the present organization, we took you at your word, that you were going to attempt to develop an organization representative of the young people of the State.

"I do not believe you ever intended to work towards that end. At any rate you have utterly failed to show an indication of living up to that promise.

"Since then it has been repeatedly demonstrated that you are interested only in an organization which will serve to promote your personal ambitions, rather than being the motivating force in urging active participation of youth, now not active, in the affairs of government, and therefore being of some benefit to the people of Maryland."

1936 Victory Of Roosevelt Held Certain

Democrats of Virginia Hear Sen. Tuck Laud Work of New Deal.

Gov. Peery Also Praises Party; Delegates Dine at Richmond.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Sept. 13.—Young Democrats of Virginia banqueted tonight after hearing their keynoter, State Senator William M. Tuck, declare President Roosevelt the choice not only of the Democratic Party, but also of the American people term and the nominating convention and election next year "mere formalities."

Gov. George C. Peery, speaking at the banquet, said the people had called on the Democratic Party in two great emergencies, war and an economic crisis as "devastating as war itself," and that it had served them well.

The Governor praised Woodrow Wilson and President Roosevelt, referring to the President as "a great Democrat, a courageous, humanitarian President" under whom the economic emergency had been met.

Program Is Praised.

"The program sponsored by Franklin D. Roosevelt must be ranked as the greatest and most successful effort in recorded history on behalf of social and economic justice," Senator Tuck, of Halifax, asserted. "We can take great pride in the fact that a Democrat conceived this program for the common weal and a Democratic Congress made it a reality.

"There is no grim specter over the American home, protected as it is now by Democratic measures conceived in the mind of our great President. The Democratic program has made no distinction as to individual, class or creed. It is a premise of Democracy that governmental blessings in this great land shall fall upon all alike."

The keynoter took cognizance of criticism made of Virginia's Senators, Carter Glass and Harry F. Byrd, for opposing many of the measures sponsored by the President. He asserted that both "at the risk of loss of political prestige and the future opportunity to hold office" stood squarely behind the Democratic nominees when Virginia voted Republican in 1928, and added:

"Although we have the right, and I hope if our convictions justify, we will from time to time disagree with our Senators and other public servants; yet, I trust we may never live to witness the day when the electorate of this State will be unwilling to accord them or their successors in office the full and free right to voice and express their honest opinions and convictions upon grave governmental policies and principles."

Glass Applauded.

Senator Glass was given an ovation when referred to by Mayor J. Fulmer Bright as the "grandest" man in the public life of Virginia. There was also applause at the mention of the names of President Roosevelt and Senator Byrd. The two Senators were on the platform.

Resignations of John Galleher and Mrs. John Galleher as national committeeman and national committee woman were announced at the afternoon session. Galleher is also State president and Mrs. Galleher recently has been elected national vice president.

T. E. Warriner, of Brunswick, formerly a member of the House of Delegates, was elected permanent chairman of the convention. Mrs. Rosenelle Patterson, of Rockbridge, was named permanent secretary.

After the convention meeting groups from several of the congressional districts convened separately to map strategy. In the third district room Harold F. Snead, of Richmond, district chairman, was boomed as the next State president in the event of Galleher's resignation this year or at the expiration of Galleher's term of office.

4,000 at Dance Celebrate Anthem's 121st Anniversary

Parade and Dedication of Armory to Feature Program Tomorrow.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Sept. 13.—The soft shades of glimmering evening gowns and brilliant uniforms of the crack military units of the Centennial Legion mingled tonight at a ball closing the first day of the celebration of the 121st anniversary of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Upward of 4,000 persons attended the dance at the new Fifth Regiment Armory, which will be dedicated tomorrow as part of the celebration. After the grand march, in which members of the "Dandy Fifth" participated, Miss Elsa Baklor, Baltimore soprano, sang the national anthem.

Nice and Ritchie to Speak.

The major portion of the celebration will come tomorrow, beginning with a parade including military units from the 13 original States.

Units Go to Fort McHenry.

Members of the Centennial Legion, clad in uniforms of scarlet and yellow, black and gray, and other combinations, began arriving early today for the celebration.

Companies here include the First Company Governor's Foot Guard, of Hartford, Conn.; the Richmond Blues; the Putnam Phalanx, of Hartford, and the Second Company Governor's Foot Guard, of New Haven; the Essex Black Horse Troop, of Virginia; the New Haven Grays; the Bristol Train of Artillery, from Virgina; the Richmond Howitzers, and the First and Second Corps Cadets, of Boston and Salem.

The units were transported to Fort McHenry for the program there this afternoon. It was while he was held aboard a British ship that Francis Scott Key witnessed the bombardment of Fort McHenry and later wrote "The Star-Spangled Banner."

O'Conor Puts Day Workers On Merit List

Ruling Affects Many Part-Time and Per Diem Employes.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Sept. 13.—The protection of the State merit system was extended today to numerous part-time and per diem workers by Attorney General Herbert R. O'Conor, when he ruled that the rate of pay and not the actual amount should decide whether the employe was in the classified service.

O'Conor's ruling was made in a letter to Col. Harry C. Jones, employment commissioner. Jones had pointed out that the merit system, by law, does not apply to employes making less than $650 per year.

O'Conor decided that if the rate of pay per year was over $650 the employe should be included under civil service. As an example, he cited the case of a man making $50 per month. This is $600 per year, and such a man is not a classified employe, he said. If the man made $55 per month, even though he worked only a few months and drew less than $650 in salary, he should be included in the system, O'Conor continued.

To rule otherwise, O'Conor said, would mean that no part-time worker would know whether he were in the system until he had worked long enough to make the necessary salary. The distinction between merit system employes and those outside it would then depend on length of time worked and not on rate of pay.

O'Conor also said that maintenance, quarters, or other service rendered an employe should be included when estimating his rate of pay.

Gallico

Learns Goodman, Little Friends Off Links and On.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 13. — This morning was more or less profitably spent trailing the hallroom boys around the golf course, with a side glance or two at the Emory-Lynch match. The hallroom boys, of course, are Johnny Goodman and William Lawson Little, who are playing one another in the feature semifinal match.

The young men are bosom pals. They go around together, they room together in a downtown hotel. They are chums and pals and the best of friends as so often occurs in the queer twists of sport, and it must be a very curious thing for them to put the light out in the bedroom they share and lie in the darkness, chatting about what is to take place on the morrow, until sleep overtakes.

The first 18 holes this morning were models of brotherly love. The two athletes came off the ninth green with their arms about one another's shoulder, but I must report that that did not prevent Little from bringing pal Goodman in 2 down. It seems that if you are a good golfer, no matter how much you love your chum the putts simply will not stay out of the hole.

Little sank a sizable contribution on the long twelfth, and on the sixteenth he exerted himself to such a degree that on a par 5 hole he put his brassie on the green and knocked in a putt for an eagle 3. Little had a very embarrassed expression on his face as he walked off that green. It was distinctly not a friendly act.

THIS is one of those curious situations that come up in sport, every so often, and which earn the fiction writer a fine horse laugh when he tries the same situation in his make-believe. There is no question but that Goodman could use the prestige that another amateur championship involves.

There is equally no question but that William Lawson Little is ambitious to complete a grand slam of sorts by winning both the British and the American amateur championships two years in succession. Damon then plays Pythias, and each has something important at stake. And what happens then?

It is here that the fact and the fiction writer make one another a ceremonial bow and part company. Their paths lie as wide apart as two duffers on a golf course. For the fiction writer weaves a yarn of terrific emotional play, internal struggle and, finally, noble sacrifice. The fact writer must stick to what he sees, which is two friendly-enough young men walking along, playing out their string, and the better golfer winning, come weal, come woe.

Somehow it becomes almost unthinkable that the two young men might fix up the show between them. If they were prize fighters and roomed together I would be screaming to the high heavens to bear witness that here was a fraud in the making. And yet you can hurt a man just as much by canning a 40-foot putt from the edge of the green as you can by hitting him on the chin. More. The effect of the 40-footer will last for days.

IT was pleasant to listen to the boys ribbing one another in the locker room last night, after each had won his quarter-final match. They were counting scotches and sodas on one another. Goodman said, "Bill, order me a scotch and soda. I'll be right back." He went away for a moment, and Little bowled, "Boy! a quadruple scotch and soda for Mr. Goodman."

Then they squabble about what time they will go to bed. Goodman has the girl friend in town, but he watches Little the way a hawk keeps its prey in eye-line. He says, "Bill, what time you figurin' on getting in tonight? If you'll stay out until 2, I will."

Little ribs right back again, and they sit, convivally, elbow to elbow, downing their drinks after the matches, and very cautiously stopping at two or three, and going off to take their showers, but one can not help wondering if there isn't just a little trace of the needle in the whole business. And would they be human if there were not?

I have never met a friend in any kind of serious competition and have no idea how I would act if I did. They were saying here today that the boys were putting past the cup so as not to lay one another stymies, but I don't go for that. Nobody is quite that delicate with the tail end of a putt. But I wonder what it is like. Is the pressure greater than when you are fighting, or playing, someone you dislike, or for whom you have no feeling?

DOES one want to win as much? Certainly one does not wish to humiliate one's friend by winning by a large margin, but can one afford to take chances by making it close? Bring him in to the seventeenth only one down, instead of five or six, and he is apt to get hot, or lucky, and sink one, and there you go.

One thing is certain: It is refreshing to see a couple of kids grinning their way around a golf course instead of tramping along with furrowed brows and tightly-compressed lips. They exchange mock reproachful glances and one has more of a feeling of sport between two men. But who can tell? Perhaps these youngsters are seething inside, masking feeling so deep down that they are hardly aware of them. Human ambition is a heavy weight to lay in the scales against friendship. Maybe the fiction writer has the easier task after all.

Pettit Stars On Slab in Triumph

Turns Back Foe Without Hit or Run in Final 3 2-3 Innings.

Kress' Single With Trio On in 6th Features Tying Rally.

By Shirley Povich.

STRIKE up the band, clear the Avenue, swing the baton, professor. Because the Nats yesterday tore loose the shackles of three straight victories and added a fourth for the first time this season. Five times before they had won three straight and always stalled in a bid for more. But yesterday they hurdled the twin obstacles of the Cleveland Indians and Friday the 13th to fashion for themselves their longest winning streak of the 1936 campaign.

They won like thoroughbreds, battering down a 3-0 deficit, picking up the Indians in the stretch innings, producing in Leon Pettit a pitcher who protected their 5-3 lead to the finish as if it were something sacred.

Pettit was an added starter for the Nats. He was rushed into the ball game in the sixth inning at a time when Irving Hadley was pitching his way to an early shower. With two on base and one out, Pettit relieved the situation by striking out Lee and pitching good ball from there to the finish. In fact, he pitched very good ball. In fact, the Indians didn't get a hit off Pettit in those last three and two-thirds innings. In fact, they didn't even get on base.

Lee Is Pounded Out.

The left-handed Lee was doing tolerably well for the Indians until the sixth, breezing along in the comforts of a 3-1 lead, until he ran into a three-run storm. The Nats batted around in that sixth and pounded Lee out of the box before Oral Hildebrand stemmed the assault.

Red Kress was the hero of that uprising. With the tying runs on base, he made his only hit of the afternoon, a stinging single through the box that brought the score to a 3-3 deadlock that caused the 5,000 Ladies Day fans to forget the dishes in the sink and shriek their delight.

Three Runs in Fourth.

The Injuns brought three scoreless innings to an end when they crashed through for three runs against Hadley in the fourth, taking advantage of his slow wind-up to steal a pair of bases during the uprising. Halen launched the inning with a double to center, stole third with one out, and Hadley then walked Knickerbocker. Brenzel and Lee followed with singles, Brenzel scoring on the latter's blow after stealing second.

The Nats replied with one run in their own half of the fourth after Travis singled off Lee's glove and took second on a passed ball, but their big inning was to come.

Myer and Travis opened the sixth with singles and, with one out, Powell beat out a hit to Knickerbocker to fill the bases. It was at this point that Kress drove his single through the box to tie the score. Powell scored with the run that put the Nats in front, 4-3, when Bolton grounded to Hughes.

Another in Seventh.

Against Hildebrand, the Nats fortified themselves with another run in the seventh, driven in by Senor Estallella who followed Myer's third single of the day with his second hit, a lusty single to center.

But that run was as superfluous as those last 22 shots they piled into the body of Dr. Weiss, because, with Pettit out there blazing away, the Indians were going nowhere, either in general or particular.

Red Sox Divide With Browns In Twin Bill

Win First, 13-4, Ferrell Taking His 23d; Drop Nightcap, 4-2.

By the Associated Press.

BOSTON, Sept. 13.—The Red Sox belted a quintet of St. Louis moundsmen for 25 hits today, but were forced to divide a doubleheader when the Browns staged a four-run rampage in the eighth inning of the second game.

Backed by the heavy slugging of his team-mates, who poled out 15 safeties, Wes Ferrell gained his twenty-third victory of the season when the Sox captured the opener, 13 to 4. In the second tilt, Rube Walberg had the situation well in hand until Julius (Moose) Solters' eighth-inning triple, which came with two on and started the Browns on the way to their 4-to-2 nightcap triumph.

Tigers Blast Yanks, Add To Lead

Rowe Wins 18th of Year as Mates Score, 13-5; Gomez Routed.

Greenberg Hits No. 35; Gehrig Slams 30th; Lead 9½ Games.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Sept. 13. — The Tigers continued their fast pace along the pennant road today by walloping the second-place Yankees, their only remaining challengers, for the second straight time, 13 to 5. The victory increased Detroit's lead to 9½ games.

In contrast to yesterday's game, when they came from behind to win, the Tigers went out ahead in the first inning today when Gerald Walker clouted the first of the game's five home runs, and they never were headed.

Lou Gehrig managed to tie the score in the fourth with his second home run of the game and his thirtieth of the season, but he couldn't halt the rampant Detroit crew. The Tigers belted Lefty Gomez for four runs in the fifth and finished with a five-run rally in the seventh as Hank Greenberg poled homer No. 35 with two aboard. The circuit swat put Greenberg two ahead of Jimmie Foxx, of the Athletics, in the major league race.

Rowe Wins No. 18.

Schoolboy Rowe had a comparatively easy time hanging up his eighteenth victory of the season. He allowed only six hits in the first eight innings and, outside of Gehrig's homers, only one run. He eased up a bit in the ninth and was touched for three hits, including the final boundary belt of the game by George Selkirk and two runs. It was his fourth triumph over the Yanks this season.

Three Yankee errors proved costly, while one of Detroit's two gave the Yanks their third run. A walk and a fumble by Gehrig preceded Greenberg's four-ply smash in the seventh and paved the way for Gomez's removal. Pat Malone also gave out a pass and a wild pitch and Blondy Ryan tossed in a fumble to complete the big rally.

Little's Foe in Finals Negotiates Trap Shot

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

And a clever shot it was that Walter Emery, of Oklahoma City, played out of the trap pictured above. He sliced the ball around a tree, carried the green and dropped a 12-foot putt to win the hole from Joe Lynch, former Georgetown star, whom he beat in the semifinals, 4 and 3. Emery meets Lawson Little for the title today in the National Amateur at Cleveland.

Little, 6 Under Par, Triumphs; Faces Emery Today for Title

several putts that were marked for birdies and wins.

Goodman started out like a house afire in the afternoon by birdying the first two holes to square the battle with his boon companion. Things looked none too good for Little, as the Nebraskan plugged away methodically with a withering blast of pars and birdies.

Never Mind Scores.

You know golf really is a funny game. Why? Well, listen to this: Goodman, at the end of nine holes this afternoon, had played the most spectacular golf of the tournament. He had five birdies and three pars, and yet, he was only even with Little with nine holes to go. Goodman went out in 32, 4 under, and Little, 34, but the streamlined Little machine started rumbling along at its record-breaking pace. "I'll catch you at the ninth, and you can't beat me."

That seems to be the spirit of Lawson Little. Six others have found that out. Johnny Goodman noticed it today. He was even with Little at the end of 27, and looked like a sure thing to beat him, but the tide of the battle turned with dramatic swiftness. The Nebraskan sliced badly into the rough on the twenty-eighth, lost the hole, and again the Little man was off on a relentless barrage of pars and birdies. He won that twenty-eighth, and he won the twenty-ninth, the thirtieth, and he holed a 35-foot putt for a birdie 3 on the thirty-third hole to climax the battle.

Several times this week, Little had been carried to the fifteenth hole, the thirty-third in this instance, and each time he has produced a birdie or par that eclipsed the efforts of his opponents.

Goodman played brilliant golf, being 1 under par while the match lasted. Little was 6 under. There's the story of the former Open champion's defeat.

As Little's ball rolled lazily into the cup on the thirty-third hole, a 417-yarder, late this afternoon, a mighty cheer rent the air. The crowd stormed on the green. Johnny Goodman put his arms around Little, kissed him on the cheek and said: "You lucky devil."

"Johnny, I didn't mean to do that."

When Goodman embraced Little and spoke to him, it was the first time in 33 holes they had said a word to one another. In the locker room they were as far apart as the two poles—friendly enemies, both eager for victory.

Goodman was a disappointed golfer. His golf was perfect. He was under par, and still couldn't take Little.

Cameras clicked. Lawson Little was photographed 50 times, and they were escorted through opposite lanes by marshals. The crowd surged forth, anxious for a glance at Little. The champion scratched his name a hundred times on sheets of paper. The autograph folks were busy.

Emery Far Ahead.

While Little was causing the hearts of galleryites to miss a beat with his spectatcular putt on the thirty-third hole, Lynch was taking a decisive beating from Emery. The Oklahoman, out in 36, even par, to Lynch's 37, was 2 up rounding the tenth, and finished the morning round with a four-hole margin on the former Georgetown University star.

Emery shot a 73 to Lynch's 76, and benefited by three-putt greens and at least three bad approaches which Lynch released for those 18 holes.

At the end of 27 holes, Emery was 5 up on Lynch, with a 35 on the outgoing side to his credit.

Lynch refused to give up, and saw a ray of hope in the fourteenth green when Emery three-putted for a 5 from 12 feet, but Emery halved the Bostonian in fives on the fifteenth hole, and the battle was over.

Hard Scrimmage Held By Emory and Henry

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Emory, Va., Sept. 13.—A three-and-a-half-hour practice, terminated by a hard scrimmage, had the Emory and Henry College gridders ready for the showers yesterday. Coach W. S. Jackson was disappointed in the manner his boys executed their plays and especially in the lack of speed on the part of his backs.

Contrary to previous reports, Coach Jackson is somewhat elated over the two passing finds, Sam Keys, versatile back, and Clarence Marshall, sophomore prospect, and the Emory football teacher has a more optimistic outlook for a variation in his offensive tactics this fall.

Scout Is Impressed By Westvaco Player

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Westernport, Md., Sept. 13.—Gene McCann, New York Yankees' scout, was impressed with the work of Frankie Sullivan, Westvaco A. A., and Russell Wilson and Joe Corbacio, of the Keyser Golden Knights, when the teams played here yesterday, Keyser winning, 7-2.

Sullivan made two sensational stops at short and pounded out a single. Wilson fanned nine and allowed five hits in the six innings he worked for Keyser. Corbacio had two singles and a double.

Cumberland, Md., Sept. 13.—Allegany High has added Piedmont High to its 1935 football schedule, making a card of 11 games for the West Siders. Walter L. Bowers, athletic director, announced today that Allegany will play at Piedmont Friday, September 27, or Saturday, September 28.

Meanwhile Coach Bobby Cavanaugh is busy trying to complete his Pennsylvania Avenue High card. Cavanaugh declared this morning Charles Town (W. Va.) High had been billed for September 28, but the site for the contest has not been selected.

Tenth Victory In Row Won By Cubs

French Allows Dodgers 8 Scattered Blows in 4-1 Triumph.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Sept. 13.—The speeding Cubs clicked off their tenth straight victory in their pursuit of the league-leading Cardinals today, bunching their hits off George Earnshaw to defeat Brooklyn, 4 to 1, before a ladies' day crowd of 26,500.

While Larry French scattered eight Dodger hits for his fifteenth victory, the Cubs jammed seven of their ten blows off the former American League star into the fourth and fifth innings. Three runs came in the fourth when singles by Frank Demaree, Phil Cavaretta, Stan Hack and Bill Jurges followed a pass to Gabby Hartnett.

Col. Buster Mills, just purchased from Rochester, drove in the Brooklyn run with a double in the second.

Major Maryland Racing Season Opens at The Graw Today

16 Juveniles In $10,000 Contest

Ned Reigh Will Meet Good Field; Double to Be Started.

By Walter Haight.

By a Staff Correspondent.

HAVRE DE GRACE, Md., Sept. 13.—America's big share-the-wealth game—popularly called the "Sport of Kings" because it is supported by the public—will be indulged in here tomorrow afternoon as Maryland's big-time fall racing season opens. Shortly after 2 o'clock a field of frisky 2-year-olds will parade to the post and at 2:15, or as near that hour as the starter can attain an alignment, the real action will begin.

Racing officials at this plant and all along the major Maryland front are viewing this season with optimism. The sport prospered during the summer months on the fair and half-mile circuits and the success seems ready to flow on into the mile ovals.

$10,000 Feature Race.

"The Graw," as this course has been dubbed, offers a $10,000 race in the feature spot tomorow. From a list of 66 nominations a field of 16 sprightly juveniles has been gathered for the contest over the six-furlong sprint course. Practically all of the major stables are represented by one or more youngsters. Despite the failure of C. V. Whitney's Red Rain to accept the issue, the Eastern Shore Handicap promises to be a keen dash.

The likely favorite is Ned Reigh, winner of the Juvenile Championship in New York. However, the colt will have his work cut out for him. Anything can happen and probably will in the large field. A. G. Vanderbilt, whose stable was the sensation of Maryland last spring, will show Maryland fans his fine colt, Speed to Spare, a winner in New York. He has paired the youngster with Postage Due. Bright and Early, Sparta, Sea Biscuit, Wise Duke and others prominent in the results during the summer are named for the test.

To Have Daily Double.

For the first time, Havre de Grace is conducting a daily double. Local officials frowned on the twin wager when it was installed last spring for the first time in Maryland, but were swung over to the "double" this fall by its popularity. As usual, the first and third races will control the pay-off.

Everything considered, tomorrow's program is a good one. It smacks of Charles Town and Hagerstown in a couple of spots, but the feature is supported by the Susquehanna Handicap and the card is well-rounded. In the Susquehanna, Kate, Stocks, Toro Flight, Deduce and other well-known horses will vie.

Sonny Workman, Johnny Gilbert, Moose Peters and several other ace riders will be on hand.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SANDY BEACH, $4.10, $3.10, $2.70; OPERA BOUFFE, $3.90, $3.30; FESTOON, $3.80.

SANDY BEACH went to the front in the first few strides, drew away into a good lead and was never menaced, winning with speed in reserve. OPERA BOUFFE, in nearest pursuit of the winner practically all the way, continued gamely to the end. FESTOON, far back in the first quarter-mile, closed gamely in the last furlong. CASH BOOK, under reserve early, was unable to reach the leaders under punishment. PATSY BEGONE went into contention in the first three-sixteenths, but dropped back in the last furlong.

THIRD RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:42. Off at 3:44. Winner, J. L. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BALANCER, $13.80, $5.70, $4.20; TRISTRAP, $4.20, $3.50; AUBURNDALE, $9.20.

BALANCER, away slowly and badly outrun for the first half-mile, moved up steadily on the inside thereafter and, closing with a rush, was up in the concluding strides. TRISTRAP, well placed all the way and withstanding determined opposition from AUBURNDALE, held on gamely to the end. AUBURNDALE fought it out stoutly all the way. ON SIR moved up gamely straightening out in the back stretch, but was unable to reach the leaders. PLUMAGE closed with a belated rush.

INFIDOX, away well, gained a slight lead in the first mile, withstood determined opposition from BLACK MISTRESS, shook her off after racing a half-mile and drew out steadily under a vigorous ride. BLACK MISTRESS showed speed from the start, was placed under punishment after rounding the far turn in an effort to keep up, but was not good enough for the winner, though hogging on gamely to the end. THE HARE, restrained early, moved up on the inside at the stretch turn and, despite being placed under punishment, was unable to reach the first two. JACKSNIPE was never prominent. EPSOM PRINCE was unable to improve his position.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won ridden out; place, driving. Went to post at 4:43. Off at 4:45. Two-dollar mutuels paid—LONG BIT, $10.40, $5.50, $4.10; RED ROAMER, $4.80, $3.60; MARMION, $6.90.

LONG BIT, steadied along under slight restraint for the first half-mile, moved up steadily on the outside after rounding the far turn, took command with a rush when straightening out in the stretch and was never threatened at the end. RED ROAMER, reserved within striking distance of the pace, responded gamely when called upon, but was unable to keep pace with the winner in the stretch drive. MARMION were down POCKET for the lead, but faltered slightly in the last quarter-mile. FABIUS, a trailer early, closed some ground while racing on the outside.

SIXTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:16. Off at 5:17. Winner, G. DIGNIFIED, slow to begin and outrun until the last half-mile, worked his way up gradually and, closing with a rush, wore down LOTTA AIRS inside the last sixteenth and was slowly drawing out at the end. LOTTA AIRS showed speed throughout, was much used in racing with BARRY and had nothing left with which to meet the bid of the winner. BARRY had early speed, but faltered. OUR ADMIRAL tired in some ground, though unable to reach the leaders. BIG SHOW was never prominent.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:47. Off at 5:47½. Winner, Mrs. S. H. Two-dollar mutuels paid—TRICKLING, $8.90, $4.70, $3.40; BALMACAN, $7.90, $4.90; MASKED QUEEN, $3.60.

TRICKLING, rated along under steadying restraint for the first half-mile, was taken to the outside and, improving his position gradually, wore down BALMACAN in the stretch to win going away. BALMACAN went to the front in the run to the stretch but was steadied soon under slight restraint, made a game bid to go along with the winner, but was not good enough. MASKED QUEEN improved her position. FOREIGN LADY raced well for first six furlongs, tiring thereafter. GUNWALE never could get up.

BLADE EDGE, permitted to settle into his stride and restrained while holding to a prominent position, went to the leaders with a rush nearing the stretch and, taking command, drew out in the last furlong. GAY CREST, unable to keep pace early, closed stoutly in the stretch run. PROSECUTOR had speed from the start, disposed of PAYRACK, only to falter in the last quarter-mile. SILENT DON tired in the drive. JOE MAC closed some ground, though never a threat.

Leonor Loree Seen Bidder in Rail Auction

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 13.—Seventy-six-year-old Leonor F. Loree emerged today as a possible contender for control of the $3,000,000,000 Van Sweringen railroad empire.

When asked if he would bid at the forthcoming auction sale of securities controlling the Van Sweringen holding companies, his only reply was:

"I have no comment to make on that."

The shaggy-bearded, stalwart figure of Loree, sometimes called the stormy petrel of railroading, has dominated several big railroad deals in recent years. His latest coup was the acquisition of a 10 per cent interest in New York Central three years ago.

Van Sweringen Will Bid.

Although P. P. and M. J. Van Sweringen, of Cleveland, have announced that they have raised capital to bid for the control and to carry on the enterprises, when the securities are auctioned off next September 30, Wall street financial experts were busy calculating today that it might be possible for some outside interest, with a few million dollars, to outbid them.

On the whole, most financial circles seemed to feel that it was unlikely that any new interest would want to assume the tremendous responsibility of trying to take control of the huge and complicated intercorporate structure which the Cleveland brothers have built up. Nevertheless, the possibility fired Wall street imagination.

J. P. Morgan & Co., as head of a syndicate of creditor banks, has announced public auction of Van Sweringen securities held as collateral against notes in default, to take place next September 30.

Security analysts attempting to calculate the value of the securities to be auctioned found it an almost impossible job, but they pointed out that the Alleghany Corporation securities, which seem to be the key to control of the Van Sweringen railroads have an aggregate current quoted value of about $3,400,000.

The total quoted value of the securities to be sold on which recent quotations are available was calculated at approximately $7,700,000. There are in addition blocks of securities for which there is no ready market, and Wall street experts said it was almost impossible to try to make any reasonable estimate of their worth.

Some Wall street observers pointed out that a point of strength for the Van Sweringens seemed to be the fact that most of the big capitalists of the country had shown no interest in railroading of recent years.

Morgan Not Interested.

The Rockefellers, Du Ponts, Mellons and others, it was explained, have found industrial enterprises more promising than railroading.

The fact that the Morgan firm is selling the Van Sweringen collateral, it was felt, indicated a desire to withdraw from the picture.

Loree, however, represents a generation which was in its prime when railroading held greater attraction for capital, and this veteran railroader has not lost his love for rails and rolling stock. He loves the steam locomotive, and does not expect to see it superseded by other forms of motive power in his lifetime.

Good Weather Fails To Depress Cotton

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 13.—Reports of more favorable weather conditions in the South failed to stimulate much selling in cotton today and prices held fairly steady within a narrow range.

After easing off to 10.45, December rallied to 10.49 and closed at 10.47, with the general market closing steady at net declines of 1 point.

Exports today, 4,119, making 830,117 so far this season. Port receipts, 52,249. U. S. port stocks, 1,456,796.

Cranberry Crop Up This Year, Forecast

Boston, Sept. 13 (AP).—Uncle Sam is going to have more cranberry sauce to eat with his turkey, chicken and duck this year—but still not as much as might normally be expected. The Nation's cranberry crop, most of which is raised in Massachusets, will total 532,000 barrels this year, according to an estimate today by the New England Crop Reporting Service.

Oil Industry Taxes Nearly Thrice Income

Total Levy in 14 Years Is 6.9 Billions; Earnings 2.4 Billions.

New York, Sept. 13.—Taxes levied upon the operations and products of the petroleum industry have totaled $6,903,265,432 in the 14 years from 1921 through 1934, as compared with the industry's estimated total earnings of $2,462,039,974, according to figures compiled by the American Petroleum Industries committee.

Final estimates place the total tax bill for 1934 at $1,036,149,575 as compared with 1934 estimated net earnings of $264,000,000. The 1934 earnings represented 2.20 per cent upon an investment of $12,000,000,000, and served to increase the average annual net earnings for the 14 years to 1.86 per cent upon the average investment estimated at $10,312-731,857.

Customers of the industry came in for a large part of the tax bill. Gasoline sales taxes paid by consumers amounted to $735,136,269 in 1934, this figure representing State and Federal collections without including county and municipal gasoline taxes. For the 14-year period, gasoline sales taxes totaled $4,518,-685,538.

Income and profits taxes paid by the industry in the 14 years totaled an estimated $627,556,324, and "other taxes," exclusive of gasoline taxes, amounted to $1,757,023,570.

Only in four of the 14 years were the industry's earnings as large as the total tax bill. Since 1929 earnings have never been as large as either gasoline taxes or income taxes. The 1934 gasoline tax bill of $735,136,269 was approximately $260,000,000 more than the industry's net earnings in its best profit year, 1929, and nearly three times its net earnings in 1934.

Market Moves Of the Day Seen In Brief Review

What the Stock Market Did.

	Friday.	Thur.
Advances	335	191
Declines	275	453
Unchanged	192	179
Total issues	802	823

Stocks—Metal and mining shares turned strong and pulled other groups up in their wake. Extreme advances were shaded in the last hour as profit taking set in. Some buying was laid to the European war situation. Sales were off to 1,739,610 shares.

Bonds—Renewed selling of Federals accounting for almost half of a fairly active session put a damper on recent bullish feeling. Expected Government support for its issues was not forthcoming as they closed at or near the lows. German government dollar bonds rallied on an announcement of increased interest payments.

Curb—Traders moved to mining shares in sympathy with the upward movement of these issues on the big board. Remainder of list was irregular.

Grains—Strength in grain markets in the late trading increased wheat quotations 1⅜ to 1⅝ cents above previous closes. Corn closed up ½ to 1¼, and oats up ⅜ to 1. Eastern houses bought freely.

Cotton—Quiet and rather irregular. Some early selling on report of better Southern weather. Trade buying absorbed most of the offerings. Closes were steady at 1 point net lower. October last at 10.42.

Sugar—Raw sugar unchanged at 3.50. Refined the same at 5.10 for the fine granulated.

Coffee—Spot coffee was steady. Santos No. 4 closed at 8½ to 8⅝ and Rio No. 7 was last at 6½.

Bar silver—Unchanged in New York at 65⅜ cents per ounce. In London last prices were off 3-16d to 29 9-16d (65.72 cents).

U. S. Treasury Receipts.

The position of the Treasury on September 11 was:

Receipts, $10,208,327.60; expenditures, $70,582,643.12; balance, $1,436,773,313.41; customs receipts for the month, $9,650,-723.49, according to the Associated Press.

Receipts for the fiscal year (since July 1), $683,424,404.95; expenditures, $1,443,-015,760.41, including $721,645,687.66 of emergency expenditures; excess of expenditures, $757,591,345.46; gross debt, $28,004,-473,606.78, a decrease of $2,076,789.75 under the previous day; gold assets, $9,219,-102,166.90.

Foreign Markets.

London—Traders were heartened by Premier Laval's speech and prices advanced on the stock exchange yesterday, according to the Associated Press. Buyers' attention was again given to industrials, gold mining and gilt-edged securities, but the closing tone was irregular and values below the best for the day. Transatlantic shares eased on Wall street reports.

Paris—Trading on the bourse yesterday was dull. Rentes held steady while international issues regained most of yesterday's losses and the market closed steady.

Highlights and Background Of Financial News and Trends

By Carlton A. Shively.

New York, Sept. 13.—Stocks acted as though no one were doing a great deal of worrying over the future of prices. Many of the leading issues sold at new high records, but the turnover was around 1,700,000 shares and enough profit taking went on to give variety to the net change price column. Bonds were quiet and mixed. Treasury issues sagged a little. Wheat jumped briskly. December futures at Chicago closed 1½ cents higher at 93⅞ cents a bushel.

Mining stocks, some of the liquor issues and a handful of rails provided the main interest in stocks. Great Northern, the reported recipient of steady buying by investors who think earnings this autumn are going to rise considerably above what the market has considered probable, continued to gain. The stock touched a new high record, and its buoyancy helped other rails but was insufficient to promote a bull market in that division. Delaware & Hudson and Union Pacific also were strong. Central and Santa Fe got up fractions at times, but the Missouri-Kansas-Texas issues were heavy. Good gains were made in the railroad equipment section.

Motor stocks were well liked. Auburn, Chrysler and General Motors rose a point. Studebaker sold at the best price for the present shares. The list as a whole was only moderately active. Steels were mixed. Airplanes hardened on fair activity.

Mining Shares.

Expectation of higher copper prices and the eternal hope among the silver group brought higher prices for most of the mining shares. American Smelting climbed 2 points or so to a new high price. United States Smelting jumped about 5 points above the low point of yesterday. Cerro de Pasco, Anaconda and Kennecott moved along. Kennecott was notably strong at a new high price. Noranda, taking its last day of trading on the stock exchange, was steady.

Foods were irregular. Electrics moved up, Westinghouse in particular. McKeesport was helped by the attention drawn to the tin-can companies. Schenley and National Distillers were among the trading favorites of the day.

Money market rates were unchanged. No attempt has been made as yet to put up the call rate from one-quarter of 1 per cent, and although the large banks are attempting to boost the time money rate from a quarter to a half of 1 per cent, no money has been borrowed at the higher rate. Actually the money market suggests a lower rate for call funds, which would make the needed gap between them and time money. However, the banks would also like to see the call rate more remunerative. So far the huge reservoir of excess reserves has prevented attempts of the larger lenders to secure more money for either class of loans.

Money Demand.

At the same time demand for money is rising slowly. For the second week in succession brokers' loans rose sharply. Even granting the influence of Government bond financing in the total, the direction has been upward and stock trading is maintained in large volume, with the rise in prices continually increasing the inducement to margin operations. This week the commercial loans of New York banks increased. Next week, with many banks planning to pay cash, instead of granting deposit credits, for new Treasury loan, excess reserves will drop and bond dealers probably will borrow enough money to send up brokers' loans, so-called for the third time in succession.

With speculation taking a bit more money and with industrial activity growing a little, it is natural that the banks, anxious as they are to lend their funds, are reluctant to tie up large sums in time loans at so low a rate as one-quarter of 1 per cent. A fall in the Federal Reserve Bank's discount rate probably would make them more favorable to long distance, low rate loans.

This week's Federal Reserve statement indicated that the reserve banks had exchanged $23,000,000 of called Fourth Liberty bonds for Treasury notes and conjecture was lively as to what proportion of their total holdings of called bonds, if any, had been held back for exchange into the new Treasury 2¾ per cent bonds for which exchange subscriptions are still being received. In connection with the 2¾s it has been rumored that Government agencies have been partly responsible for the amount of those bonds already subscribed for.

Boomlet in the Red Metal Becomes Wall Street Topic.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 13.—The boomlet in copper metal and the shares of non-ferrous metal producers came to the fore today as a topic of active interest in Wall Street.

Recent gossip in trade circles of a nearby increase in the price for copper in the domestic market took on greater plausibility as metal market men reported that morning dealings in the red metal were unusually active.

The rate of early business gave indications that turnover for the entire day would exceed substantially that of Wednesday and Thursday, on each of which more than 7,000,000 pounds changed hands.

At the same time, it was said that cables to copper interests indicated a brisk demand for export metal, with sales as high as 8.37½ cents a pound, compared with yesterdays range of 8.25 to 8.32½ cents.

Shares of corporations having interests in the copper field were an active feature of dealings in the stock exchange, at rising prices. In late trading the stock of U. S. Smelting was up $8 a shore to $103, while others ahead 50 cents to around $2 a share included American Smelting, Kennecott, Cerro de Pasco and Phelps-Dodge. A block of 10,000 shares of Anaconda changed hands in the final hour at $21, up 75 cents at a new high for the year.

Hudson Car Sales Set 6-Year Record

New York, Sept. 13.—Retail sales of Hudson and Terraplane cars in August totaled 6,321, which was greater than for any August since 1929. August sales registered a gain of 21.6 per cent over the same month of 1934.

Retail sales for the week ended August 31 were substantially better than for the first week of the month, showing a gain of 38.3 per cent over the corresponding week of 1934.

Pig Iron Sales Are Running Heavy

New York, Sept. 13 (AP).—Dealers report that pig iron sales have been running in some sections at the best levels this year. Inquiries in the Eastern seaboard region are said to be continuing at totals of from 3,000 to 5,000 tons.

One machinery maker in the New England territory is said to have made an inquiry for 10,000 tons.

Foreign Exchange.

With the exception of the belga, gold currencies tended to back away from the dollar yesterday in world foreign exchange markets, the Associated Press reported.

At Paris the dollar closed at the equivalent of 6.588 cents to the franc, while in New York the French unit was off .00⅛ of a cent to 6.59 cents. The guilder lost .18 of a cent at 67.39 cents. Belgas rallied .02⅛ of a cent at 16.89⅛ cents.

In London the dollar finished about unchanged at 4.94 to the pound sterling. At New York the British currency was up ½ cent at $4.94¼.

Freight Loads Off 87,075 Cars In Short Week

Labor Day Layoff Blamed for Drop From Four-Year Peak.

By R. Karl von Lewinski.

Freight carloadings during the week of September 7 dropped 87,075 cars from the previous week's four-year peak, the Association of American Railroads here reported yesterday.

Evidence that the sharp slump which carried total loads to 592,786 cars could be laid in part to the Labor Day holiday was furnished by the fact that loads were greater than either the preceding year or 1933.

The increase over 1934 was set at 28,903 cars and the increase over the same week of 1933 was 14,853. Miscellaneous freight during the week totaled 225,067 cars, a decrease of 28,987 cars below the preceding week, but 19 084 above 1934 and 18,224 cars above 1933.

Less than carlot merchandise failed to keep the pace set by the other divisions and decreased 21,162 cars below the preceding week, to 141,378. Loads increased 166 over 1934, but fell 7,168 cars below 1933.

Coal loadings amounted to 110,-756 cars, 20,770 below the preceding week, but 9,667 cars above the same week of 1934, and 75 cars above 1933.

Grain and grain products totaled 36,650 cars, 7,894 below the preceding week, but 4,717 above the same week in 1934 and 9,762 cars above 1933. In the Western districts alone, grain products for the week were 4,288 cars above the same week in 1934.

Forest products totaled 26,873 cars, 4,495 below the preceding week, 7,344 cars above 1934 and 4,311 cars above 1933. Ore loading amounted to 31,062 cars, 4,564 below the preceding week, but 7,902 above the corresponding week in 1934. It was 5,639 cars below the same week in 1933.

Coke loading amounted to 6,050 cars, 17 above the preceding week, and 923 above 1934, but 850 below 1933. All districts reported increases for the week of September 7, compared with the corresponding week last year, with the exception of the Centralwestern and Southwestern districts. Compared with the corresponding week in 1933, all districts showed increases except the Eastern and Allegheny.

Peak Premium Paid for Spot Chicago Wheat

Buying Movement Boosts Late Trading After Early Losses.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 13.—Roused by a sudden broad purchasing movement on the part of commission houses, the Chicago wheat market went strongly upward late today.

Eastern houses that on previous days were sellers of wheat became conspicuous buyers. A notable stimulating factor was attention given to trade reports of acceleration of the pace of general fall business throughout the United States.

No. 2 dark hard wheat sold at $1.15 to $1.18 a bushel spot cash, 23 to 25 cents over the price of September delivery, the highest premium yet this season.

At first, wheat prices here averaged lower, influenced by downturns of quotations at Liverpool after two weeks of steady advance. Cables said the Liverpool reaction was due to a less warlike outlook at Geneva. On the other hand, England was reported a heavy buyer of Australian wheat, and Argentine advices continued to tell of need of soaking rains. Significance, too, was attached to talk of liberal export buying of Canadian wheat, and to announcement vessel space had been chartered for a shipment of wheat from Chicago to Buffalo.

Domestic millers were eager buyers of millable wheat, despite fancy premiums that were demanded. Moreover, offerings of wheat future deliveries here were light, with hedging less in evidence. Talk was current that the Chicago wheat market the past few days had been called upon to absorb an unusual amount of hedging sales, and had taken them well.

New Canned Beer To Go on Market

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Sept. 13.—Following tests in some 75 breweries throughout the country, Continental Can Co., Inc., will begin deliveries of its newly developed tin containers for beer this month, it was announced here today by President O. C. Huffman.

The brewers with whom the company has signed contracts for can requirements are now completing changes in equipment necessary to pack beer in the new cans and expect to have their product on the market around October 1.

Simultaneously, it was announced that Continental Can Co. will launch a national advertising campaign to acquaint the public with the advantages of canned beer. A separate advertising campaign will also be undertaken in the brewing and bottling trade publications.

"Distribution of beer in cans has developed very rapidly in the several sections of the country where it has been introduced and there is now no doubt of its prompt acceptance by the public," Huffman declared. "We have been working on the development of a suitable tin container for beer in our laboratories for the past two years."

Building Pace In Past Month 61.2% Over '34

New York, Sept. 13.—Building activity in August continued substantially higher than a year ago, Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., reported last night.

The value of building permits issued in 215 cities of the United States, reached a total of $55,536,546 last month, the largest since November, 1931.

This compared with $54,191,787 in July, an increase of 2.5 per cent, slightly more than the normal gain of 1 per cent.

The August total compared with $34,452,738 for the same month of 1934 a rise of 61.2 per cent.

Groups.	August, 1935.	Change P. Ct.
New England	$2,975,334	+ 26.9

In comparison with a year ago, the August permit figures showed particular improvement in the South Central and Pacific sections, which turned in gains of 207.0 and 106.2 per cent, respectively.

The mountain, East Central and South Atlantic divisions showed marked betterment, while the Middle Atlantic and New England groups made moderate gains.

The building construction record for 1935 has made remarkable progress since the low levels reached in 1933.

The contemplated expenditures for building during the first eight months of 1935 in the 215 cities amounted to $362,972,432, as compared with $235,736,911 in the same period of last year, and $202,297,272 two years ago, when the building industry was at its worst.

The improvement over last year was widespread, all sections of the country showing gains, with the South Central, Pacific and Mountain groups reporting increases of over 100 per cent.

Goodrich Co. Hits Otis Challenge

By the Associated Press.

New York, Sept. 13.—The B. F. Goodrich Co., in a statement issued today, explained the court action filed here to validate its proposed $45,000,000 bond issue.

Recounting that stockholders at the recent meeting, by a vote of more than 75 per cent, authorized the new mortgage, the statement said:

"At the meeting, however, Otis & Co. challenged certain of the proxies which had been received from the stockholders. In order to eliminate any possible doubt which may have been raised by this challenge, the present suit has been instituted in which Otis & Co. and others have been made defendants."

The complaint, filed in the Supreme Court, says legal action for the mortgage is necessary before bonds are issued and sold to the public. Other defendants besides Otis & Co. are William H. Hunt, William G. and Ernestine Benedict and Louise Didsburg.
